That is why, quite frankly, Mr. President, I do think on this issue that we are best to let communities make those decisions because they are going to vary. The conditions are going to vary a great deal.

Now I know there can be those who say, that may be all right for those particular communities at the present time, but what if those individuals move from one part of the country to the other? That complicates the question.

By and large, Mr. President, I do believe the way we have fashioned and shaped this particular proposal moves us into the kind of a situation which we developed in an effort to substantially achieve the objective of the Senator from Colorado. Quite frankly, though I find this issue troublesome, at least I think this is a measure which can achieve the best balance in terms of the public health. So, that is why we have been in counsel and why we have been having the discussions and debates and the quorum calls to try and find out if we could not find some way to weave through that complex dilemma.

I appreciate getting the acceptance of these amendments. I hope we might be able to continue the debate on other different issues this evening. Hopefully, we can dispose of the few other items and then, if necessary, come back and revisit this tomorrow and dispose of the other items which I know are of interest to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I want to understand, to be sure, the Senator from Colorado will tomorrow offer his amendment?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I have not decided that. Just to put it in perspective for the Senator and for others who are thinking about this, the Kennedy amendment is, in essence, the amendment which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] and the Senator from Oklahoma and I were going to offer. It differs in only two respects, one little technical correction and, second, it makes somewhat less mandatory the requirement for States to provide spousal notification, or partner notification and contact tracing.

I am personally persuaded that is a very desirable thing for any State to do. We have a very successful program in my own State of Colorado.

Mr. HELMS. If the Senator will yield, most of the language in the Armstrong-Helms-Nickles amendment was picked up by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is correct. The only issue is the exact meaning and the policy question of how much latitude should be given to local officials. If it is a reasonable degree of latitude, frankly, that would not be unsettling to me. But if it leaves to some local public official the right to simply thwart the intent of Congress about contact tracing and partner notification, then I would be disturbed.

However, rather than bog down trying to analyze that and make a determination of the exact meaning of those words on the floor tonight, my suggestion was that we just take the Kennedy amendment. Then if we need to amend it further tomorrow, I am advised by the Parliamentarian that we would be in shape to do so. If we need to do so, we can take a look at it tomorrow. If not, we can pass it over.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator.

May I ask either of the managers of the bill, how much time is given the States to come up with this policy? There is no time specified. Is it 6 years, 4 years, 1 month?

Mr. HATCH. It is my understanding that it will be 2 years.

Mr. HELMS. Two years.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HELMS. Certainly.

Mr. KENNEDY. Unless they come up with a program, they are not eligible for the funding.

Mr. HELMS. I understand.

Mr. KENNEDY. So they would have to, in effect, meet the requirements. Otherwise, they would not be eligible for funding.

Mr. HELMS. Both Senators understand my concern. I keep hearing the words of that lovely woman and her daughter who came to my office in tears and I asked what the problem was. She said, "I have AIDS." Her scoundrel husband knew he had AIDS and he forbade anybody to notify his wife. That is what I am trying to get at it. I am not sure this solution will get at it.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HELMS. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. We think it will because, basically, we provide for notification in this amendment. That is a big step forward, something that a lot of people were unwilling to do last year. It does not make a lot of people who may be affected by this happy, but that is what happens.

Second, we provide that the States have the right to institute their own reporting and contact tracing processes. They do not get the money until they do but we leave how to do it with the States. It is strictly up to them. This amendment goes a long way toward doing exactly what the distinguished Senator from North Carolina has been advocating over the years. I have to say it pleases me that it goes in that direction.

I just want to make that clear—it does leave it up to the States. Implementation is discretionary in the States.

As the distinguished Senator from North Carolina knows, he and I have fought side by side for years to try to allow the State and local governments the right to do their own thing. That is what this amendment does. It is interesting that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, who normally has been against that process in the Federal funding of health programs, is the author of this amendment. So we have come a long way.

Mr. HELMS. I jokingly say to the Senator that makes me suspicious; if you find TED KENNEDY and JESSE HELMS on the same side, we may or may not have a problem.

Mr. HATCH. It may be because we are all trying in the best bipartisan way we can to resolve what are really difficult problems in our society. I have yet to find in a public health area where my colleague from Massachusetts has not been willing to sit down and work out these problems in a bipartisan way.

I have seen other areas where he is not willing to do so, but in the public health area he has always tried to work out solutions to problems.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, our option is still open tomorrow. I have no objection to the Chair proceeding with the vote if the Chair desires.

REPORTING OF AIDS CASES

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I have no objection to the provisions of this amendment as they relate to partner notification and allow local public health officials to use their own judgment on the appropriate manner to carry out such activities, and I have previously voted for a similar amendment dealing with spousal notification.

I do have a concern that this amendment might, however, be interpreted to require States to report names of individuals with AIDS to a central authority. That is not necessary to carry out a reasonable partner notification program. Because of fears of discrimination, the existence of such a list might well serve to deter people from seeking testing and counseling and drive them underground.

I recognize that there may be differing interpretations of the requirements of this aspect of the amendment, but my feelings on the privacy issues involved in potential list-keeping of the names of individuals who have been infected with HIV are so strong, I am compelled to oppose it for this reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1619) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to Mikulski amendment No. 1618, as amended.

The amendment (No. 1618), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we are prepared to move ahead with the next amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, if we can.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

AMENDMENT NO. 1620

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] proposes an amendment numbered 1620:

On page 32, line 15 insert "Ryan" before "comprehensive".

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to offer a second-degree amendment to the amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1621 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1620

(Purpose: To change the short title to the "Ryan White Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990")

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment on behalf of Senator KENNEDY and myself to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], (for Mr. KENNEDY, (for himself and Mr. HATCH)) proposes an amendment numbered 1621:

In lieu of the matter proposed, insert the following: "Ryan White".

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, to me these two amendments are the most important amendments of the day. They really are. These amendments by the authors of this bill, S. 2240, dedicate this bill to Ryan White. I am very pleased to announce the presence of his lovely mother, and I wanted to be able to do this, both Senator KENNEDY and I and the rest of the members of the committee, this evening.

I would like to read this dedication:

S. 2240 is dedicated by the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee to the memory of Ryan White, who died on April 8, 1990, after a 6-year battle against AIDS.

Beginning at the age of 13, Ryan valiantly fought not only the human immunodeficiency virus itself, but also fears about AIDS that were based on ignorance and senseless discrimination against people with AIDS and HIV disease. With dignity, patience and almost unvarying good cheer, Ryan White introduced to people across America and across the world a face of AIDS that caring human beings could not turn their backs upon. First through his courageous fight to be allowed to go to school with his peers, then through his tireless efforts to educate and explain the realities of his illness, young Ryan White changed our world. By dedicating this legislation to Ryan, the committee affirms its commitment to provide care, compassion, and understanding to people with AIDS everywhere. Ryan would have expected no less.

In memory of Ryan White and 70,000 Americans who have lost their lives to AIDS. And with hope for all people living with AIDS.

Mr. President, this is a beautiful dedication that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and all the members of the Labor and Human Resources Committee have endorsed. By this amendment we make very clear our particular love and affection for this family, and, in particular, Ryan himself.

If all people faced with difficulties had the courage and the dignity and the grace that this young man had, this country and this world would be a lot better place in which to live.

I also want to say about his family—they are great people. They sustained him, they supported him, they helped him and they fought for him. I want to give them a lot of credit for being the good people that they are.

Mr. President, I want to compliment my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts for his leadership in this matter. And I am proud to be a cosponsor with him in these Kennedy-Hatch amendments.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I welcome the opportunity to make this alteration and change in the legislation to make it very clear that the spirit of this brave and gallant young person, Ryan White, was very much a part of this legislation which, when passed and when it is realized in the communities across this country, will provide a significant lessening of anguish and of suffering.

Mr. President, we find courage has existed in various forms, shapes, and ages in our society. I think probably most of us recognize, such as the Presiding Officer at this time, the physical courage in times of warfare, and in times of conflict. It is generally associated with people of age and life's experience when they are able to put forward their own personal comfort and interest, and respond to a higher order.

This country was inspired and continues to be inspired by the courage of this extraordinary young person. He demonstrated courage in the most exemplary way, and in a way which I think drew on the heartstrings of all who had the opportunity to meet him, and certainly those who read about him or heard him speak or had the opportunity to meet his mother.

Many of us in this body like to believe that perhaps we make some difference in terms of some of the problems that are facing this country and facing the world.

This extraordinary young person really made a contribution that in many respects will exceed what any of us might hope to achieve as Members of Congress or Senator or perhaps even a President. It was a lesson of personal courage that is important and instructive to all of us.

At a time when the forces of fear and distrust are still circling in the atmosphere and climate, particularly with regards to this extraordinary public health challenge, to witness that extraordinarily noble ring from that incredible young person is really a lesson of the highest order.

So I think all of us are honored to be able to have the indication from Ryan's mother and members of the family that this is a worthy cause for this extraordinary young person to be identified with. He does all of us a service. We hope that we will honor his life and his memory, not only by the achievement of this legislation, but by continuing the battle to tolerance, sense of decency and humanity which, when this country is at its best, reflects to its fellow citizens who are sick and who are suffering.

So I hope the Senate will act favorably on these amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Masachusetts.

The amendment (No. 1621) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1620, as amended.

The amendment (No. 1620), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERREY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, as an original cosponsor of the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990, I rise today to urge the swift passage of this critically important legislation.

When we talk of waging war on this deadly disease, I am reminded of another war: the Vietnam war. I am reminded of the innocent men, women, and children who lost their lives in that war and the suffering endured by those who survived. And I am reminded of something we did not consider often enough then: the value of individual human lives.

In that context, Mr. President, one statistic tells a tragic story: More Americans have died of AIDS than died in the Vietnam war; 70,000 individual human lives have been taken—stolen—by AIDS in this country—in only 10 years. And while the first 100,000 cases of AIDS in the United States were reported between 1981 and 1989, another 50,000 are expected to be diagnosed this year alone. By 1991, AIDS will far exceed all other causes of death for people between the ages of 25 and 44.

As the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee in the first half of the 1980's and the committee's ranking Republican member in the years since, I note with some pride the fact that—despite the absence of an AIDS authorization bill until the 100th Congress—Federal AIDS spending has skyrocketed from $5.5 million in fiscal year 1981 to $1.6 billion this year.

Just in the last year we have made enormous gains:

This year's spending on AIDS includes $750 million for research at the National Institutes of Health—almost $150 million above the last year's level alone.

Our allocation this year for services to AIDS victims and their families, as well as training for health care personnel, exceeds the President's budget request by more than $50 million.

Spending for AIDS-related pediatric health care demonstrations this year is $15 million, double last year's level. Spending for adult care demonstrations in communities with a high prevalence of AIDS was increased $2.7 million.

In an effort to increase the number of AIDS prevention and education programs, spending for the Centers for Disease Control was increased by $38 million, and we appropriated $20 million for an entirely new program to support inhome health services for AIDS vicitms.

Mr. President, Congress has devoted 10 years to the development of our response to AIDS. But it is not nearly enough. Anyone who questions that statement need only look at the physical and emotional pain this disease has left in its wake. Anyone who questions that statement need only look at the individual human faces of suffering.

In relative terms, my State has not been hit as hard by AIDS as other States. Through the end of March, 771 cases of AIDS have been diagnosed in Oregon and 448 people have died of AIDS-related causes. The annual incidence of AIDS in Oregon is 8 cases per 100,000—compared to the national rate of 14.1 cases per 100,000 people.

But statistics are relative, Mr. President. Human lives are not. The loss of just one is an enormous tragedy—and that tragedy is repeating itself in Oregon at the rate of one AIDS-related death every 3 days.

As my colleagues know, the rate of AIDS-related deaths is much higher in other parts of the country. Indeed, because the concentration of AIDS in certain States and cities is overwhelming the health care delivery systems, the legislation we are considering today is designed to increase Federal support to those regions.

In response to a report from the Centers for Disease control that AIDS cases in rural areas increased 37 percent last year alone, this legislation is also designed to increase Federal support for rural health care delivery systems. These increases are desperately needed.

The $600 million price tag attached to this legislation may seem overwhelming, Mr. President, but I hope my colleagues will consider one simple fact: The cost of this legislation is less than the price of one Stealth bomber. That statistic, I think, speaks volumes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, today we are considering S. 2240, the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this important initiative, which provides $600,000 million in emergency relief for AIDS care in the United States.

Half of these funds would go to 13 big cities that have more than 2,000 AIDS patients. Most AIDS victims rely on the public health system for treatment, straining an already bursting health care network.

My State of Florida ranks third in the country in the number of reported AIDS occurrences. In February 1990 some 10,000 Floridians had been diagnosed with AIDS; 279 Florida cases were pediatric.

Dade County, home to Miami, reported 899 AIDS cases last year. Under S. 2240, Miami would receive almost $5.7 million in disaster relief. Most of that money would be directed to Jackson Memorial Hospital, the only public hospital in the county.

Mr. President, the Southeastern AIDS Clinic at Jackson Memorial is the busiest AIDS treatment center in the United States, taking in approximately 160 new cases each month. Since the beginning of the AIDS epidemic, Jackson has served 5,800 patients, more than any hospital in America. Jackson also has the highest incidence of pediatric AIDS in the United States.

The situation at Jackson Memorial is increasingly dismal. As medical demands for AIDS patients increase, the hospital is inundated with Central American refugees in need of emergency care. AT the same time, one-third to one-half of the hospital's patients are indigent and cannot pay for care.

Jackson continues to serve up to 70 AIDS patients each day at the outpatient clinic and through hospital admittances. Public hospitals such as Jackson are facing a virtual gridlock due to the growing AIDS caseload. In Miami, children are the fastest growing AIDS population, and their treatment is among the most expensive AIDS care.

The cost of this fiscal health crisis could exceed $6 billion next year. That is why we must act now to combat and control this onerous and tragic disease. AIDS is one of the most serious health problems in the history of our country. How we as a Nation decide to treat and resolve the AIDS issues will affect our national health and each of our lives.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, AIDS has wreaked havoc on our Nation. The costs in human life are already high, and only getting higher. Over 75,000 Americans have died of AIDS, more Americans than lost their lives in Vietnam. Medical science is beginning to catch up, and I have faith that we will one day have a cure, but we must face the fact that victory is still years away.

In the absence of a monumental medical breakthrough, the legislation before us today, the CARE Act, is an especially potent weapon against AIDS.

The CARE Act recognizes the widespread nature of AIDS. In many quarters, there is a perception that the AIDS crisis is confined to the east and west coasts. It is true that coastal cities—such as New York and San Francisco—have borne an inordinate share of the burden of AIDS. But it is also true that this epidemic spares no one.

The assistance provided by the CARE Act is particularly welcome in my State. Of the 13 hardest hit cities in America—the cities eligible for funding under title I of the bill—2, Houston and Dallas—are in Texas. Overall, Texas has the fourth-highest number of reported AIDS cases in the Nation.

The magnitude of the problem is graphically demonstrated by the situation at Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas. Parkland is the only public hospital in Dallas County. As a result, over 50 percent of all AIDS patients in the county come to Parkland for treatment. What's more, Parkland must treat increasing numbers of AIDS patients from outlying counties with no public hospital of their own. The result is that, on any given day, 20 AIDS patients are hospitalized there. The costs are staggering, with care for one AIDS patient often reaching $100,000 over the patient's lifetime.

Another such example is Harris County: From 1987 to 1989, the number of total patient days for AIDS patients in Harris County more than doubled. Needless to say, the cost of treating the patients more than doubled as well. In the Harris County Hospital district, the total cost of treating AIDS patients went from $3.8 million in 1987 to over $8 million in 1989.

So the assistance that the CARE Act offers will be welcome in Dallas and Houston. But CARE goes further. Half of the funds authorized under the CARE Act will go to other areas, based solely on need. In Texas, this means that places like Austin, San Antonio, and El Paso will get some of the help necessary to deliver outpatient services to those individuals infected by HIV, and establish clinics for early intervention and medical monitoring.

AIDS is not going to go away. It is with us every day, with escalating costs in lives and money. This bill will help communities around the country deal with the consequences of the epidemic. The CARE Act deserves the full support of Congress, and it has my vigorous support.

S. 2622. A bill for the relief of Vivian Eney; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FOR THE RELIEF OF VIVIAN ENEY

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, on August 24, 1984, Christopher Eney, a sergeant with the Capitol Police, died as a result of a training accident. Because of an ambiguity in the law regarding compensatory time off, the Capitol Police have been unable to pay Sergeant Eney's widow, Vivian, for the compensatory time off he had accumulated at the time of his death. I am introducing this private relief bill to allow that payment to Mrs. Eney.

Mr. President, Sergeant Eney was a talented police officer who served in a variety of special programs. At the time of his death, he had accumulated 1,085 hours in compensatory time off. Based on his annual salary of $33,034, the cash equivalent of that time off is $17,230.53.

Unfortunately, current law (40 U.S.C. 206(b)) prohibits the Capitol Police from making a lump-sum payment to an officer upon termination of his service for any accrued compensatory time off. That provision has been interpreted to prohibit making payment to a widow upon an officer's death.

Mr. President, Sergeant Eney had put in a great deal of extra uncompensated service to the U.S. Government. If it had not been for his unfortunate death caused by a training accident, he would have been compensated for that time. It seems only fair that his widow receive what was rightfully owed to her husband.

We all appreciate the faithful service of Sergeant Eney, and I hope the Senate will act expeditiously on this legislation.

By Mr. LIEBERMAN:

S. 2623. A bill to authorize issuance of a certificate of documentation for employment in the coastwise trade of the United States, Great Lakes trade, and fisheries for the vessel Rose; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

RELATING TO COASTWISE TRADE CERTIFICATION OF THE VESSEL "ROSE"

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, in the port of Bridgeport, lies the largest operating wooden sailing ship in the United States. Built from plans of the original 1757 English frigate, the H.M.S. Rose is also about to become our country's largest and most magnificent wooden sailing school vessel. That's all to the good, but a little-known provision of law will limit the Rose's effectiveness and mission, unless we grant an exemption.

Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill to authorize issuance of a certificate of documentation for employment in the coastwise trade of the United States, Great Lakes trade, and fisheries for the vessel Rose. Congressman SHAYS of Connecticut is introducing today the House version of this bill.

Because the present-day replica of the Rose was built in 1970, in Nova Scotia, it is prohibited from engaging in what is known as coastwise trade in the United States. But surely, this provision was not meant to prohibit sailing school vessels owned by nonprofit foundations from supplementing their ecology lessons by bottom-trawling Long Island Sound. Nor was it meant to prohibit historic sailing ships from carrying postcards, T-shirts, or tourism literature from port to port; but it does. My bill would grant the Rose an exemption for these purposes, so that she can both engage in her mission and support herself.

Fifty-thousand schoolchildren tour the Rose each year—in Bridgeport alone. Several hundred thousand board her in other ports of call. The Rose's mission is to teach the ecology issues of Long Island Sound and to provide a memorable walk directly into our own colonial history.

Consider the history of the original Rose. She was built in Hull, Yorkshire, England, in 1757 as a 24-gun frigate. After fighting in the Seven Years War, guarding the English Channel and attacking the French Channel ports, she sailed to the West Indies, taking part in the capture of both Havana and Martinique.

The Rose came to the United States next and indirectly helped to launch the legal career of a young John Adams. In April 1769, Lieutenant Panton, the Rose's first officer, was killed while trying to impress sailors from a brig called the Pitt Packett. Four seamen of the Pitt Packett were charged with piracy on the high seas. Then an unknown lawyer, John Adams was appointed to represent the men in court; they were found not guilty by reason of self-defense.

From there, the Rose proceeded to Newport, RI in 1774 on the eve of the Revolution to attempt to control the smuggling trade. Her success resulted in massive unemployment for Newport, causing much of the population to leave by the following year. The Rhode Island General Assembly sent a bill to the Continental Congress to establish a national Navy to deal with the Rose. The bill passed on October 13, 1775, giving birth to the American Navy.

After supporting the British campaigns up the Hudson and East Rivers and patrolling the western end of Long Island Sound, the Rose sailed to Savannah, GA. There, the career of the original Rose ended. To block the invasion of a French fleet, she was ordered sunk across the mouth of the harbor, and Savannah was saved.

Mr. President, the present-day Rose, while originally built in Nova Scotia, has been entirely rebuilt in this country. She has been supported generously by the city of Bridgeport and the State of Connecticut. On the Fourth of July 1986, the Rose attended the Op-Sail/Statue of Liberty celebration in New York Harbor.

The Rose now stands ready to embark on a new career. The legislation I introduce today will help the foundation which supports her pay for itself. Students will be able to learn about the ecology of Long Island Sound. The Rose will be able to carry postcards and other mementos from port to port, rather than having to offload and truck them, as must be done now. In addition, the Rose could carry tourism literature for the State of Connecticut.

The H.M.S. Rose is already much beloved by the people of Connecticut. The legislation I introduce today will enable the Rose to share her history and her lore with hundreds of thousands of citizens of the United States.

I am certain, Mr. President, they will learn to appreciate her as we do.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be included in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2623

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That notwithstanding section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (46 U.S.C. App. 883) and sections 12106, 12107, and 12108 of title 46, United States Code, the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may issue a certificate of documentation for employment in the coastwise trade of the United States, Great Lakes trade, and fisheries for the vessel "Rose" (United States official number 928811).●

By Mr. BENTSEN (for himself, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. BREAUX, and Mr. GRAHAM):

S. 2624. A bill to amend the professional and graduate institution program under part B of title III of the Higher Education Act of 1965 to add certain additional institutions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

AID TO HISTORICALLY BLACK GRADUATE SCHOOLS

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, education is vitally important to both personal success and the success of this country. A well-trained work force is critical if America is to remain competitive in today's increasingly global markets. A higher education system that makes advanced training available to Americans is crucial to this effort.

Today, I introduce legislation that will provide vital assistance to a select group of graduate schools that play an important role in our higher education system. These six schools—Thurgood Marshall School of Law and the School of Pharmacy at Texas Southern University, North Carolina Central University School of Law, Southern University School of Law, the Florida A&M College of Pharmacy, and Xavier University of Louisiana School of Pharmacy—provide advanced education and professional training to a large number of blacks, Hispanics, and members of other economically disadvantaged groups. This group is making tremendous contributions to the effort to achieve true equal opportunity in education in this country. I believe they deserve our help.

Here in Congress, we have already concluded that it is appropriate to provide special aid to higher education institutions contributing to this effort. In 1986, we passed the Higher Education Act which created the title III program that supports historically black colleges around the country. We then went a step further; we created a special fund targeted at improving graduate school opportunities for black and other low-income students. Funding was provided for five independent and historically black graduate schools—Morehouse School of Medicine, Atlanta University, Meharry Medical Schools, Tuskegee School of Veterinary Medicine, and the Charles R. Drew Postgraduate Medical Schools—all of which we recognized as doing a fine job of opening the door to greater opportunities for black Americans.

I wholeheartedly support the graduate school set-aside section of the Higher Education Act for these distinguished institutions, but I feel it is time to expand this distinguished list. Other graduate schools who are making similar contributions deserve our recognition and support.

For example, the mission and purpose of the Thurgood Marshall School of Law is providing advanced educational opportunity to persons of diverse ethnic, academic, and economic backgrounds. Sixty percent of the students at the school are black and another 19 percent are Hispanic. In 1986, almost one of every two black law school graduates in Texas came from the Thurgood Marshall School of Law, and the school graduated almost as many Hispanics as the other five Texas law schools, save the University of Texas, combined. Clearly, this school is making an invaluable contribution to professional education opportunities for minorities in Texas.

I am sure that Southern University Law School, North Carolina Central University School of Law, the Florida A&M College of Pharmacy, and Xavier University of Louisiana School of Pharmacy are making similar contributions in their States. Like the five schools already listed in the statute, these schools are opening new doors for disadvantaged groups. They deserve similar recognition and our assistance.

I want to reassure those of you who are supporters of the original group of schools receiving assistance that I will not rob Peter to pay Paul. My legislation sets forth a plan that maintains the current level of funding, $11 million, for the original group covered by section 326; appropriations over that but less than $13.5 million will be divided among the new group. Anything more than $13.5 million will be available to all 11 schools. These numbers were thoughtfully negotiated and subsequently approved by the 11 schools involved. While I am sure that more dollars is a constant need for all of these institutions, we cannot disregard our current budget crisis. I am confident that their agreement reflects the fairest division of the funding available for graduate schools under section 326.

Mr. President, I am pleased that I am joined in introducing this legislation by Senator BREAUX, Senator JOHNSTON, Senator SANFORD, and Senator GRAHAM. We all recognize the fact that much work remains to be done before true educational and economic opportunity exists in this country, and we are prepared to roll up our sleeves to achieve that objective. With this legislation, I believe we are taking a small, but significant, step in that direction.●

● Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, quality education is an absolutely essential ingredient in American economic competitiveness. It is vital to the success of the American dream.

In an effort to guarantee equal opportunity for all individuals in the United States, the Federal Government currently provides support to a variety of unique institutions of higher learning. These institutions are unique in the programs that they offer and in the people that they serve.

One such group of institutions, historically black colleges and universities, has long been recognized under title III of the Higher Education Act. Within title III is a special fund that provides support for a group of five graduate schools, all of which have an excellent and proven record of providing opportunities for black and low-income students. This special program has worked well and it is time to expand the list of graduate institutions that have access to it.

I am proud to join my colleague from Texas, Senator BENTSEN, as an original cosponsor of legislation that will add a group of six additional graduate school programs that will now be eligible for the fund. These six programs; Southern University School of Law, Xavier, University of Louisiana School of Pharmacy, Thurgood Marshall School of Law, Texas Southern University School of Pharmacy, the North Carolina Central University School of Law, and Florida A&M College of Pharmacy and Pharmaceutical Sciences, all provide an opportunity for advanced education for minorities and low-income students that is not readily available elsewhere.

It is my understanding that all 11 of the institutions involved are supportive of this legislation. In the name of equal education opportunity I encourage my colleagues to join in support of these fine institutions. The role of graduate and advanced professional education in our Nation's economic success and in individual fulfillment is indisputable and it deserves our support.●

By Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself, Mr. REID, and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S. 2625. A bill to amend the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act to ensure that hazardous pesticides are promptly removed from the market and to ensure that the health of all citizens, particularly our children, is protected, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

PESTICIDE HEALTH AND SAFETY ACT

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, 1 year ago today the Environment and Public Works Committee's Subcommittee on Toxic Substances, environmental Oversight, Research and Development, chaired by my colleague from Nevada, Senator HARRY REID, held a hearing on pesticides in the food supply. The hearing focused on the Alar controversy as just one example of the numerous problems with our current system of pesticide regulation. Based on the testimony at that hearing and the followup hearing which was held on September 22, 1989, we reached some conclusions that it takes EPA too long to cancel dangerous pesticides and that EPA knows too little about the neurotoxic effects of pesticides and the risks to children.

We found that it often takes EPA 15 to 20 years to remove a dangerous pesticide from the market; Alar took 17 years. And we found that if the manufacturer of Alar had not voluntarily stopped selling it, it would probably have taken EPA another 3 to 5 years to end its use.

These conclusions, similar to those reached by GAO studies and previous congressional investigations, were not disputed by the Environmental Protection Agency. In fact, in October 1989 the President indicated his desire to change pesticide laws because they were not providing sufficient protection for American consumers and farmers. The President's proposals themselves do not provide the genuine changes in pesticide law necessary to protect public health. We waited many months for the administration to draft amendments to FIFRA and, although the President made some proposals, the administration has yet to actually produce legislation. To date, the President has not taken action on even the minimal proposed changes. This is not the kind of leadership we need from the "environmental" President.

In the year since the first Toxic Substances Subcommittee hearing was held, no change has been seen in EPA's regulation of pesticides. The EPA has not acted more quickly to suspend or cancel dangerous pesticides. The EPA has not initiated a closer examination of the neurotoxic effects of pesticides, and it has not issued regulations to prevent conflicts of interest on the part of members of the scientific advisory panel.

Today I am joining with Senators REID and DURENBERGER in introducing the Pesticide Health and Safety Act of 1990, which amends current pesticide law to ensure that it provides American farmers and consumers with the protection they deserve. These two distinguished colleagues have worked long and hard to protect human health and the environment from dangerous pesticides. The Pesticide Health and Safety Act will ensure that the EPA examines the effects of a pesticide on children and other sensitive populations before it registers or reregisters it. Our bill will ensure that EPA can remove dangerous pesticides from the market much sooner than under current law, and it provides for the periodic expiration of pesticides registrations which will force the industry and the EPA to ensure that pesticides are safe based on the most up-to-date scientific data.

The bill also requires all pesticide applicators to keep records of the date and time of pesticide applications and requires certified applicators to receive training in integrated pest management and sustainable agriculture. The bill also provides much needed changes in the scientific advisory panel [SAP]. In studying the Alar situation I was surprised to learn that no member of the SAP was a pediatrician or a scientist trained in public health even though the SAP was making critical recommendations affecting our health and the health of our children. I was also disturbed to learn that some members of the SAP consulted for the chemical industry before and during their service on the panel. The legislation we are introducing today requires that a pediatrician and a public health specialist be members of the SAP, that all nominees be required to publicly disclose previous consulting activities, and that all members of the panel be barred from consulting for any company with an interest in pesticides while on the panel.

I hope our legislation will mark the beginning of a stronger government focus on helping farmers and other pesticides users to reduce dangerous pesticides in our environment, on our food, and on our lawns. I look forward to working with the members of the Agriculture and Environment Committee to this end.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section description of the bill and the bill be printed in their entirety immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Pesticide Health and Safety Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the removal of carcinogenic pesticides from the market may take 18 years from the date of the first finding of carcinogenicity;

(2) the time consuming process and the years of indecision can be harmful to all participants, the manufacturers, the growers and the consumers;

(3) delays in decisionmaking and the inability of the Environmental Protection Agency to remove dangerous products from the market may expose children to hazardous chemicals at critical periods in their development; and

(4) the 18 years or more that it has taken the Environmental Protection Agency to act on Alar and on EBDCs is a clear indication that the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act must be amended.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act and the amendment made by this Act to provide for the effective control of pests and the protection of human health and the environment.

SEC. 3. DEFINITION.

Section 2 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C. 136) is amended—

(1) in subsection (e)—

(A) by striking out "which is classified for restricted use" in the first sentence of paragraph (1);

(B) by striking out "pesticide which is classified for restricted use for purposes of producing any agricultural commodity" in paragraph (2), and inserting in lieu thereof "registered pesticide for purposes of producing any agricultural commodity that the grower offers for sale or trade";

(C) by striking out "pesticide which is classified for restricted use" in paragraph (3), and inserting in lieu thereof "registered pesticide"; and

(2) in subsection (j), by striking out "and man" and inserting in lieu thereof "people, especially population subgroups understood to either be more heavily exposed, more sensitive, or both"; and

(3) in subsection (bb)—

(A) by striking out "to man" and inserting in lieu thereof "to people, children,"; and

(B) by striking out "the economic" and inserting in lieu thereof "particular economic".

SEC. 4. REGISTRATION.

Section 3 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C. 136a) is amended—

(2) in subsection (c)(2)(A), by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Administrator shall publish standards for neurotoxic information required to support the registration of a pesticide product within one year of the date enactment of the Pesticide Registration Act of 1990."; and

(3) in subsection (c)(5)—

(A) by inserting ", on the health of children, or on the public health taking into consideration regional, ethnic, and other circumstances that may increase risk to certain population groups" before the semicolon in subparagraph (C);

(C) by inserting ", on the health of children, or on the public health taking into consideration regional, ethnic, and other circumstances that may increase risk to certain population groups" before the period in subparagraph (D); and

(D) by inserting before "The Administrator" the following new sentences: "The Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register guidelines on the manner in which to calculate the benefits of a pesticide. The Administrator shall only consider whether the denial of the registration will cause major disruptions in the nutritional balance of children or adults or otherwise adversely affect the quality or safety of the food supply.".

SEC. 5. CERTIFIED APPLICATIONS.

Section 11 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C. 136i) is amended—

(A) by striking out "and shall not" and all that follows through "pesticides" in the second sentence;

(B) by striking out "sale, offering for sale" and all that follows through "commercial application" in the sixth sentence, and inserting in lieu thereof "private application, sale, offering for sale, holding for sale, or distribution of any registered pesticides to maintain such records and submit such reports concerning the application"; and

(C) by striking out the ninth and tenth sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following new sentence: "The Standards shall also provide that the certified individual be shown to be competent with respect to integrated pest management practices, including the ecological principles underlying sustainable and economical pest control methods."; and

SEC. 6. CANCELLATION.

Subsection (b) of section 6 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C. 136d(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) CANCELLATION.—

"(1) STANDARD FOR CANCELLATION.—The Administrator shall cancel the registration of a pesticide if the Administrator determines that—

"(A) there are prudent concerns that the pesticide causes unreasonable adverse effects on the environment or on human health when used in accordance with its labeling or in accordance with actual practice; or

"(B) the pesticide product or its labeling or other material required to be submitted by the Act do not comply with the requirements of the Act.

The proponents of the registration of a pesticide shall at all times have the burden of showing that the standard for cancellation is not met.

"(2) PROPOSED CANCELLATION ORDER.—If the Administrator determines that the standard for cancellation may be met, the Administrator shall initiate a cancellation proceeding by issuing a proposed cancellation order. If the proposed cancellation is based on a concern that the pesticide may pose a risk to human health or the environment, the Administrator shall review scientific information prior to issuing a proposed cancellation order. The Administrator shall base the cancellation decision on actual exposure data, except that if such data is not available, the Administrator shall base the decision on the best available theoretical or estimated risk of exposure. The Administrator shall send a copy of the proposed order to each registrant holding a registration addressed by the proposed order and shall publish the proposed order in the Federal Register. The proposed cancellation order shall include (or incorporate by reference to publicly available documents) the following:

"(A) A statement of the factual and legal bases for the proposed cancellation action.

"(B) If the pesticide is used to produce an agricultural commodity, a general analysis of the impact of the proposed action on production of major agricultural commodities and on the prices and availability of vital retail foods (those foods necessary to ensure a proper nutritional balance for an individual) to determine whether the proposed action will severely disrupt the domestic availability and affordability of a major agricultural commodity. Such analysis shall not consider regional variations in production, but shall examine the national availability of the commodity.

"(C) An analysis of the available substitute chemical and nonchemical pesticides and of the alternative agricultural techniques available to minimize the risks associated with the use of the chemical pest control techniques.

"(D) If the pesticide product is used on more than one agricultural commodity, a review of the cumulative effects of the pesticide product on human health and the environment.

"(E) The changes, if any, in the terms and conditions of registration that a registrant would need to make in order for the Administrator to conclude that cancellation would not be appropriate.

"(3) REVIEW OF PROPOSED CANCELLATION ORDERS, DENIALS OF APPLICATIONS FOR REGISTRATION, OR PROPOSED CHANGES IN CLASSIFICATION.—The registrant or applicant for registration, and any other interested person, shall have an opportunity to comment on a proposed cancellation order, denial of application for registration, or proposed change in classification, for at least 60 days after the publication of the proposal in the Federal Register. The Administrator shall send a copy of the proposed cancellation order to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Scientific Advisory Panel. Unless the Secretary and Panel waive the opportunity to comment, the Administrator shall allow at least 60 days from their receipt of the proposed cancellation order to submit written comments on the proposed order. All comments submitted pursuant to this paragraph shall be advisory in nature, and the Administrator shall issue the final determination on the basis of the standard set forth in subsection (b)(1)(i). No final cancellation order may be issued under paragraph (4) prior to the passing of the comment period.

"(4) FINAL ORDERS.—(A) If no comments opposing the proposed action are submitted by registrants or other interested persons during the comment period provided pursuant to paragraph (3), and if, in the case of a cancellation proceeding, a registrant does not notify the Administrator that the registrant has made the changes, if any, specified in the proposed cancellation order pursuant to subparagraph (b)(2)(E), the Administrator may issue a summary final order canceling registration, denying application for registration, or changing classification. Such final order shall be published in the Federal Register and sent to each registrant of, or applicant for, a registration addressed by the final order. Such final order shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(B) If, after reviewing comments submitted pursuant to paragraph (3), the Administrator determines that the standard for cancellation or registration, denial of application for registration, or change in classification is met, the Administrator shall publish a final order of cancellation, denial of application, or change in classification in the Federal Register and shall send a copy of such order to each applicant for, or registrant holding, a registration addressed by the final order. The final order shall include (or incorporate by reference to publicly available documents) the following—

"(i) the factual and legal bases for the final order;

"(ii) a summary of the major comments submitted by the public and, in the case of a cancellation proceeding, submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Scientific Advisory Panel, and the responses of the Administrator to such comments;

"(iii) in the case of a cancellation proceeding involving a pesticide used in the production of an agricultural commodity, an analysis of the impact of the proposed action on the production of major agricultural commodities and on the prices and availability of vital retail foods (those foods necessary to ensure a proper nutritional balance for an individual) to determine whether the proposed action will severely disrupt the domestic availability and affordability of a major agricultural commodity;

"(iv) an analysis of the available substitute chemical and nonchemical pesticides and of the alternative agricultural techniques available to minimize the risks associated with the use of the pesticide;

"(v) if the pesticide product is used on more than one agricultural commodity, a review of the cumulative effects on the use of the pesticide product on human health and the environment; and

"(vi) in the case of a cancellation proceeding, a description of the changes, if any, in the terms and conditions of registration of a pesticide product that registrant would need to make in order for the final cancellation order not to apply to the product.

Final orders issued pursuant to this subparagraph will be effective on the date of the publication of such in the Federal Register, except that in the case of a cancellation order where the Administrator has established terms and conditions as an alternative to cancellation pursuant to clause (iv), the order shall not be effective until 30 days after the publication of such in the Federal Register, and a product will not be canceled pursuant to the order if a registrant, within such 30-day time period, has applied to amend its registration to comply with the time specified terms and conditions.

"(C) All cancellation proceedings shall be concluded not later than 2 years after the publication of the proposed cancellation order in the Federal Register. If the Agency fails to conclude the proceeding, the Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register a notice showing good cause why the proceedings have not been completed.

"(D) On the issuance of the final cancellation order, the tolerances established for the pesticide shall be revoked. The Administrator may issue regulations to account for unavoidable residual environmental contamination in existence after the revocation of the tolerances.

"(E) If, after receiving the comments submitted pursuant to paragraph (3), the Administrator determines not to cancel, deny application, or change classification, the Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register a final decision to that effect and shall send a copy of such order to each registrant of, and applicant for, a registration addressed by the proposed order. Such decision shall include the factual and legal basis for the determination of the Administrator, and shall include a summary of the comments submitted concerning such proposed order and the responses of the Administrator to such. Such a decision shall be effective on publication.

"(5) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, judicial review of the final order, or final decision not to issue an order, issued pursuant to subparagraphs (B) or (C) of subsection (b)(4) shall be made available to any person who is adversely affected by the order or decision in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or for any other Circuit in which the petitioner for review resides. Requests for review shall be filed in an appropriate Court of Appeals not later than 60 days after the publication of the final order or decision in the Federal Register. Judicial review shall be based on the administrative record compiled by the Agency concerning the proposed cancellation, denial, or change in classification. The final order or decision shall be sustained on review unless the action is determined to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or not in accordance with law.

"(6) PETITIONS TO SUSPEND, CANCEL, DENY APPLICATION OR CHANGE CLASSIFICATION.—

"(A) Any person may, at any time, petition the Administrator to suspend or cancel a registration pursuant to this section or to deny an application for registration or change the classification of a pesticide pursuant to section (3) of this Act. Such a petition shall include the factual and legal bases supporting the petition.

"(B) If the Administrator determines that the requested action is necessary to serve the purpose of the Act, the Administrator shall suspend the pesticide or issue a proposed order to cancel, deny application, or change classification, and the appropriate provisions of this section or section 3 shall apply.

"(C) If the Administrator denies the petition, the Administrator shall specify the basis for such denial. The petitioner may thereafter seek judicial review of the denial of the petition in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or for any other Circuit in which the petitioner resides. Requests for review shall be filed in an appropriate Court of Appeals within 60 days after receipt of the denial of petition. Judicial review shall be based on the administrative record developed during the course of consideration of the petition. The order denying the petition shall be sustained on review unless the action is determined to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or not in accordance with law.

"(7) EFFECT OF FINAL ORDER OF CANCELLATION, DENIAL OF APPLICATION, CHANGE IN CLASSIFICATION.—

"(A) The Administrator may issue an order summarily denying any application for registration or amendment under sections 3 or 24, or application for exemption pursuant to section 18, with respect to a pesticide that has been subject to a final order issued pursuant to this section canceling registration, denying application for registration, or changing classification, unless the applicant has presented substantial new evidence that—"(i) may materially affect the basis for or content of the prior order;

"(ii) was not available to the Administrator at the time the Administrator issued the final order; and

"(iii) could not, through the exercise of due diligence, have been discovered prior to the issuance of the final order.

If the Administrator determines that the applicant has not provided substantial new evidence complying with the requirements of this subparagraph, the Administrator may issue an order summarily denying the application and shall send a copy of such order to the applicant.

"(B) The applicant may thereafter seek judicial review of the order summarily denying the application in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or for any other Circuit in which the applicant resides. Requests for review shall be requested in an appropriate Court of Appeals within 60 days after the receipt of the denial of application. An order denying an application under this subparagraph shall be sustained on review unless the order is determined to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or not in accordance with law.

"(C) If, after review of an application (and supporting data submitted by the applicant) for a registration or amendment pursuant to sections 3 or 24, the Administrator determines that the applicant has submitted substantial new evidence and that reconsideration of the prior final order may be warranted, the Administrator shall publish a notice in the Federal Register announcing that the Administrator is reconsidering the prior final order. Such notice shall describe the nature of the application, contain the factual and legal bases for the determination of the Administrator that reconsideration may be warranted, and shall provide an opportunity of at least 60 days for interested persons to comment on the issues of whether reconsideration should be granted and whether the application should be granted.

"(D) After the opportunity for comment on a notice issued pursuant to subsection (b)(7)(C) has expired, the Administrator shall publish a final decision in the Federal Register either denying the application or granting reconsideration of the prior final order to the extent necessary to consider the application. A final decision granting reconsideration may, at the discretion of the Administrator, contain a final determination granting or rejecting the application. If such a final determination is not contained in a final decision granting reconsideration, the application shall be reviewed according to the provisions of sections 3 or 24 as appropriate.

"(E)(i) If the Administrator issues a final decision pursuant to subsection (b)(7)(D) denying reconsideration of a prior final order, the applicant may petition for judicial review of any such denial in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, or the Court of Appeals for any other Circuit in which the petitioner resides, within 60 days after the publication of the notice in the Federal Register. Judicial review shall be based on the administrative record compiled by the Agency concerning the application. The final decision shall be sustained on review unless the action is determined to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or not in accordance with law.

"(ii) If the Administrator grants reconsideration, but denies the application, the Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register a notice proposing denial of registration pursuant to section 3(c)(6). Such a notice may be contained in a final decision granting reconsideration issued pursuant to subsection (b)(7)(D). Subsequent action on the proposed denial shall be in accord with the applicable provisions of subsection (b).

"(iii) If the Administrator determines, after granting reconsideration, that the application should be granted, he shall publish in the Federal Register a notice granting the application. Such a notice may be contained in a final decision granting reconsideration issued pursuant to subsection (b)(7)(D). Any person who is adversely affected by the granting of the application may petition for judicial review of the determination of the Agency to grant the application in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, or the Court of Appeals for any other Circuit in which the petitioner resides, within 60 days after the notice granting the application is published in the Federal Register. Judicial review shall be based on the administrative record compiled by the Agency concerning the application. The grant of the application shall be sustained on review unless the action is determined to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or not in accordance with law.

"(8) AUTHORITY TO ISSUE REGULATIONS.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as limiting in any way the authority of the Administrator to issue regulations pursuant to section 25, including regulations requiring the adoption or modification of specific terms and conditions of registrations issued pursuant to this Act.".

"(9) DETERMINATION AS TO CANCELLATION.—

"(A) If the Administrator determines that a pesticide cannot be canceled pursuant to the criteria described in section 6(b)(2) and the Administrator has prudent concerns that such pesticide poses a particular risk to the health of any population subgroup or to the environment, the Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register a regulation reclassifying the pesticide, or the particular use or uses to which the determination applies, for prescription use only.

"(B) The prescription use classification described in subparagraph (A) shall, on the label, require that a certified pest control expert, pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Administrator, inspect the setting in which the pesticide is to be applied in order to—

"(i) document the presence of the target pest;

"(ii) determine that no cultural or biological option is available;

"(iii) confirm that no general or restricted use pesticide is registered for use on the target pest that could be expected to bring about a comparable degree of control; and

"(iv) specify the timing, rate, and conditions of use of the pesticide, and maintain a record of such evaluation and prescription to be provided, on request, to State and Federal officials.

"(C) Any such reclassification shall be reviewable in the appropriate Court of Appeals upon petition of a person adversely affected filed within 60 days of the publication of the regulation in final form. The final decision of the Administrator shall be sustained on review unless the action is determined to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or not in accordance with the law.

SEC. 7. SUSPENSION.

Subsection (c) of section 6 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C. 136d(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) SUSPENSION.—

"(1) ORDER.—If the Administrator determines that the use of a pesticide may cause significant adverse effects to human health or the environment, the Administrator may issue an order immediately suspending the registration of a pesticide. The Administrator shall send to the registrant by certified mail a copy of the suspension order, and shall publish the order in the Federal Register. The order shall become effective either on the publication of such in the Federal Register or on the receipt by the registrant of the order, whichever occurs first. The suspension shall automatically expire 180 days after becoming effective unless, on or before such expiration date, the Administrator has published in the Federal Register a proposed cancellation order that would cancel the registration of the pesticide use suspended by the order issued under this subsection. If a proposed cancellation order is issued prior to the expiration date, the suspension shall continue in effect until terminated in accordance with paragraph (3).

"(2) EXISTING STOCKS.—The Administrator may allow continued sale or use of existing stocks of a suspended pesticide, unless such use may cause significant adverse effects to human health or the environment.

"(3) DURATION OF SUSPENSION.—A suspension issued under this subsection may be terminated by the Administrator at any time. A suspension order issued under this subsection shall automatically terminate on completion of a proceeding to cancel the registration of the pesticide under subsection (b), or on cancellation by the Administrator of the suspended registration. If the cancellation of the Administrator or the suspended registration is overturned by a reviewing court, the suspension order issued under this section shall automatically be reinstated.

(4) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Any suspension order entered by the Administrator pursuant to this subsection shall be subject to review in an action by the registrant, or by any other adversely affected person in an appropriate district court, solely to determine whether the order of suspension was arbitrary, capricious, or an abuse of discretion, or whether the order was issued in accordance with the procedures established by law. No such action will be entertained by a district court unless the action is filed within 20 days of publication of the order in the Federal Register. The effect of any order of the district court will be to stay the effectiveness of the suspension order, pending the final determination of the Administrator with respect to cancellation. The commencement of proceedings under this paragraph shall not operate as a stay of the suspension order unless otherwise ordered by the court.".

SEC. 8. SUNSET PROVISION.

Subsection (d) of section 6 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C. 136d(d)) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) EXPIRATION OF REGISTRATIONS.—

"(1) DURATION OF REGISTRATIONS.—Notwithstanding any other condition imposed on the registration of a pesticide product, the registration of a pesticide product that has not been canceled or has not otherwise expired shall automatically expire in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

"(2) PRE-1984 PESTICIDES.—The registration of a pesticide product containing an active ingredient, such ingredient was contained in a pesticide first registered before November 1, 1984, shall expire—

"(A) 19 years after the date on which the active ingredient was first registered; or

"(B) 9 years after the date on which the Administrator determines, pursuant to section 4(g)(2)(A), that the pesticide products containing the active ingredient are eligible for reregistration, whichever is later.

Thereafter, the registration of any product containing such active ingredient shall expire every 9 years after the date on which reregistrations for pesticide product containing that active ingredient had most recently expired.

"(3) POST-1984 PESTICIDES.—The registration of a pesticide product containing an active ingredient, such ingredient was contained in a pesticide first registered after October 31, 1984, shall expire 15 years after the date on which the active ingredient was first registered. Thereafter, the registration of any product containing the active ingredient shall expire every 9 years after the date on which registrations for pesticide products containing that active ingredient had most recently expired.

"(4) PESTICIDES CONTAINING MORE THAN ONE ACTIVE INGREDIENT.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (2) and (3), the registration of pesticide products containing more than one active ingredient shall expire at such time as the Administrator determines, provided that no registration shall expire sooner than—

"(A) 15 years after the date on which the earliest registration was granted for an active ingredient in the formulation; or

"(B) 9 years after the date on which the Administrator determines, pursuant to section 4(g)(2)(A), that pesticides containing one of the active ingredients in the product are eligible for reregistration; whichever is later. Thereafter, the registration of any product containing more than one active ingredient shall expire every 9 years after the date on which such registration had most recently expired.

"(5) NOTIFICATION.—The Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register the dates on which the registrations of pesticide products shall initially expire.

"(6) EXPIRATION OF TOLERANCE.—The tolerance of a pesticide product shall expire concurrently with its registration. The Administrator may, on application by the registrant, continue the tolerance for not more than 2 years to ensure that agricultural products already in the stream of commerce are allowed to be sold. In order for the pesticide product to be reregistered, the tolerance level must be reset.

"(7) SALE, DISTRIBUTION, AND USE OF EXISTING STOCKS.—(A) Except as provided under subparagraph (B), existing stocks of any pesticide product, the registration of which has expired pursuant to this section, may be sold and distributed for one year after the date on which the registration of the product expired unless the Administrator determines that additional sale and distribution is appropriate, except that the registrant may not sell and distribute more product than the average amount sold and distributed by the registrant annually during the last 3 full calendar years prior to the expiration of the registration. Any such sale, distribution, and use of existing stocks permitted by this section shall be subject to the limitations, terms, and conditions applicable to the sale, distribution and use of the product prior to its cancellation.

"(B) The Administrator may prohibit or establish such additional limitations and conditions as the Administrator determines necessary to fulfill the purposes of the Act on the sale and distribution or the sale, distribution, and use of a pesticide product the registration of which has expired pursuant to this section, if he determines that use of the pesticide may cause unreasonable adverse effects on the environment or on human health.

"(8) APPLICATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the filing of an application for renewal of the registration of a pesticide product does not extend the registration past the date on which it expires unless—

"(A) in the case of a registrant that would not qualify for the exemption in section 3(c)(2)(D) with respect to one of the active ingredients in its product—

"(i) the registrant has submitted an application for renewal of its registration at least a year before the expiration date; and

"(ii) the Administrator has not issued a notice pursuant to section 3(c)(6) proposing to deny the application; or

"(B) in the case of a registrant which would qualify for the exemption in section 3(c)(2)(D) with respect to all of the active ingredients in its product—

"(i) the registrant has submitted an application for renewal of its registration at least 6 months before the date on which the registration is scheduled to expire; and

"(ii) the Administrator has not issued a notice pursuant to section 3(c)(6) proposing to deny the application.

When a timely application for renewal of a registration is filed pursuant to this paragraph, the expiration date for such registration shall be considered to be the date the Administrator either grants the application for renewal or issues a notice pursuant to section (3)(c)(6) proposing to deny the application.

"(9) CONTENTS OF APPLICATIONS FOR RENEWAL.—The Administrator may issue regulations establishing requirements for the contents of applications for renewal. In such regulations the Administrator shall require applications for renewal to comply with the same requirements as are in effect at the time for initial applications for registration.

"(10) DENIAL OF APPLICATIONS FOR RENEWAL.—The Administrator shall issue a notice of denial pursuant to section 3(c)(6) if—

"(A) a timely application for renewal was not received;

"(B) an application for renewal does not comply with the requirements for registration;

"(C) by the end of the time periods prescribed by paragraph (8), an agreement for delivery of information needed for renewal, including a schedule for delivery, has not been entered into; or

"(D) the registrant has not made a good faith effort to adhere to conditions in subparagraph (C).

If the Administrator determines that an application for renewal does not comply with the requirements for registration, the Administrator may issue a notice pursuant to section 3(c)(6) proposing to deny the application, except that if the Administrator determines that an applicant for renewal has made a good faith effort to comply with the requirements for registration, the Administrator shall not issue a notice pursuant to section 3(c)(6) until the Administrator has provided the applicant for registration a reasonable period of time to make the necessary corrections to complete the application. The Administrator shall not issue a notice of denial of application for renewal of registration before notifying the Secretary of the intent of the Administrator to issue such a notice and the reasons therefor, and providing the Secretary with an opportunity to provide comments to the Administrator on the proposed denial.

"(11) FEES.—(A) Pursuant to section 4(i) fees will be assessed for the registration of each pesticide product;

"(B)(i) There shall be established in the Treasury of the United States a reregistration and neurotoxicity and other research fund.

"(ii) All fees collected by the Administrator under subsection (d)(4)(A) shall be deposited into the fund and shall be available to the Administrator, without fiscal year limitation, to carry out reregistration, research on the neurotoxic effects of pesticide products, and other research deemed necessary by the Administrator.

"(iii) The Administrator shall provide an annual accounting of the fees collected and disbursed from the fund and take all steps necessary to ensure that expenditures from such fund are used only to carry out this section.

"(12) PUBLICATION.—Not later than 90 days after any registration of a pesticide product expires pursuant to this subsection, the Administrator shall—

"(A) notify the registrant of the expiration and the conditions, if any, under which the existing stocks may be sold, distributed, and used; and

"(B) publish a notice in the Federal Register listing each pesticide product, the registration of which has expired, and the conditions, if any, under which the existing stocks of the product may be sold, distributed and used.".

SEC. 9. RECORD KEEPING.

Section 8 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C. 136f) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. RECORDS.

"(a) AUTHORITY TO REQUIRE RECORDS.—The Administrator may require any producer, importer, or exporter of a pesticide, registrant, applicant for registration, applicant for or holder of an experimental use permit, pesticide testing facility, or any holder of a pesticide that is the subject of a regulation or order issued under section 19(b)—

THE PESTICIDE HEALTH AND SAFETY ACT OF 1990—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

(By Senator Lieberman (for himself, Senator Reid, and Senator Durenberger)

Sec. 1. SHORT TITLE.—This Act is called the "Pesticide Health and Safety Act of 1990."

Sec. 2. FINDINGS.—Congress finds that the removal of dangerous pesticides from the market often involves significant delays and is not sufficiently protective of human health and the environment.

Sec. 3. DEFINITIONS.—Expands the definition of certified and private applicators to cover those who use all registered pesticides. Expands the term "environment" to specifically cover population subgroups understood to be more heavily exposed and/or more sensitive to pesticides.

Sec. 4. REGISTRATION.—Amends the registration provisions of FIFRA to ensure that a pesticide's effects on the health of children and other population subgroups are specifically reviewed prior to registration. Requires that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) establish specific standards for the review of a pesticide's neurotoxic effects prior to registration.

Sec. 5. CERTIFIED APPLICATORS.—Certification standards must provide that a certified applicator is proficient in integrated pest management and sustainable pest control methods.

Sec. 6. CANCELLATION.—The cancellation standard is revised to enable the EPA Administrator to cancel a pesticide when there are prudent concerns that the pesticide causes unreasonable adverse effects on human health or the environment. The registrant has the burden of showing that the standard for cancellation has not been met. Under current law a pesticide can only be cancelled when the Administrator determines that it generally causes unreasonable adverse effects on the environment.

In determining whether to cancel a pesticide, the Administrator must review the impact of the cancellation on the price and availability of vital retail foods, analyze the available substitute chemical and nonchemical pest control methods and alternative agriculture techniques, and, if the pesticide is used on more than one commodity, review its cumulative effect on human health and the environment.

All cancellation proceedings must be concluded in 2 years.

If the Administrator determines that cancellation is not proper pursuant to this section, but has prudent concerns about particular risks of a pesticide, the Administrator may reclassify one or more uses of the pesticides as a prescription use. Under a prescription use classification the pesticide can only be used after a certified applicator has determined that the target pest is present and that other pest control techniques are not viable.

Sec. 7. SUSPENSION.—The suspension standard is revised to enable the Administrator to suspend a pesticide upon a determination that use of the pesticide may cause significant adverse effects to human health or the environment. Under current law the Administrator can only suspend a pesticide if it presents an "imminent hazard".

Sec. 8. SUNSET PROVISION.—All pesticide registrations and tolerances will expire every nine years. They will be reregistered upon a determination that they comply with the standards for registration at the time their registration expires. No provision of current law has been interpreted by the EPA as requiring the expiration of all pesticide registrations.

The already-established fees collected in conjunction with reregistration shall also be available to the Administrator to conduct research on the neurotoxic effects of pesticide products and other research deemed necessary.

Sec. 9. RECORD KEEPING.—The Administrator shall require commercial and private applicators to keep records of pesticide applications and shall require pesticide dealers to maintain records of sales and distributions of pesticides.

Sec. 10. SCIENTIFIC ADVISORY PANEL.—The membership of the panel shall include a pediatrician and a scientist trained in public health. The Administrator shall require each nominee to provide information on previous employment and consulting activities and this information shall be made available to the public. No member of the panel shall be permitted to consult or receive any direct or indirect benefit from a company with any interest in pesticide products while serving on the panel. Current law does not contain any restrictions on consulting by members of the Scientific Advisory Panel.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I express the appreciation of Senator LIEBERMAN, Senator DURENBERGER, and the Senator from Nevada to Senator KENNEDY and Senator HATCH for allowing us to go out of order for the introduction of this important legislation.

Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator LIEBERMAN and DURENBERGER introducing the Pesticide Health and Safety Act of 1990.

This bill is a result of several months of inquiry conducted by the Subcommittee on Toxic Substances, Environmental Oversight, Research and Development of the Environment and Public Works Committee into the pesticide regulatory process.

Fears about the use of Alar in apples and apple products prompted my subcommittee to delve into the complicated area of regulating food—raw and processed, imported and exported—to ensure it is safe.

This hearing was conducted exactly a year ago to review the regulation of the growth regulator Alar, the pesticide regulatory process generally and potential acute and chronic neurotoxic effects of exposure to pesticides generally.

Alar was a substance that was used widely in the agricultural industry. It was used in apples, grapes, and cherries, the purpose of which was to prevent the fruit from falling off the tree or ice quickly and to make the color of the product much richer: Apples much more red, cherries much more red, and grapes, of course, according to what color they were but a deeper green or purple, whatever the fact might be. The Alar story provides a useful case study into what is wrong within the process.

Following the hearing and negotiations with the Environmental Protection Agency which resulted in the voluntary withdrawal of Alar from the domestic market, the subcommittee completed a report entitled, "Government Regulation of Pesticides and Food: The Need For Administrative and Regulatory Reform."

I might state at this time, Mr. President, that even though it was a voluntary withdrawal, it came after much public debate and, in fact, frankly, because of the public debate the apple industry principally was hurt. Sales being hurt because the hearing brought out the fact Alar was dangerous to the people eating the apples. And, in fact what the Environmental Protection Agency did, as a result of its inaction, it had hurt the apple industry. It was only because the hearing focused on it that there was a voluntary withdrawal of this product from the market.

The report that the subcommittee did outlined the shortcomings in the pesticide regulatory process generally and sets forth recommendations for improvement.

Mr. President, concern about food safety has emerged as the catalyst for reforming regulations pertaining to the use of pesticides in food. There are over 50,000 agricultural chemicals used in America today. Approximately 1.2 billion pounds of pesticides, costing more than $65 billion, are sold each year. This, Mr. President, is over 5 pounds of pesticides for every man, woman, and child in our country.

Before a pesticide can be sold it must be registered with the EPA. Although registered, the majority of the pesticides have not undergone modern testing for serious health effects. Remember, we are talking more than 50,000 of them. Because of increased concerns about the alphabet soup of chemicals used on food, Congress has required EPA to reregister these products. Unfortunately the process has been slow. And that is an understatement.

The General Accounting Office reported to the subcommittee last September that reregistration has not been completed for a single chemical.

Should concerns arise about the safety of a pesticide, it is often difficult to remove that product from the market. The history of Alar clearly demonstrates the inability of EPA to act swiftly and effectively.

Evidence that Alar caused cancer in animals was discovered in 1977, Mr. President, not 1987. In 1980, 3 years after it was discovered, EPA took the first steps to begin a special review to consider the benefits and risks not considered at the time of the product's original registration. It was not until 1985 that EPA announced its intention to cancel all food use registrations of Alar. The EPA then referred the matter to the Scientific Advisory Panel for review.

The Senator from Connecticut, in his statement prior to mine, made some extremely powerful points regarding the Scientific Advisory Panel, but following the meetings that took place behind these closed doors, the Scientific Advisory Panel disagreed with EPA's assessment, believing additional tests were necessary to conclude that the product should be canceled.

Mr. President, perception is, most of the time, more important than reality. In this instance the fact that those people, or a large segment of those people serving on the Scientific Advisory Panel, had just prior to reviewing these materials done work for the chemical industry, created a perception that no matter if they were right or wrong, there was a conflict of interest.

Sadly, Alar was allowed to stay on the market, pending additional information from the manufacturer.

It was in January 1989 EPA announced it would initiate proceedings to cancel Alar, 12 years after the chemical's safety was questioned. Our subcommittee was told cancellation proceedings could take as little as 1 year or as long as 4 years. We found this incredible and immediately introduced legislation to ban Alar.

One of the, I think, important people we have not spoken about yet is the ranking member of the Senate subcommittee, JOHN WARNER, of Virginia. Senator WARNER was one of the leaders in calling for public hearings and, in effect, called for Alar's being voluntarily taken from the market. It was a significant help for a number of reasons. It added his stature and it also made the issue bipartisan in nature. I have expressed my appreciation to the Senator from Virginia on a number of occasions, and I do so again today, for the work he rendered on behalf of making fruits, especially apples, grapes, and cherries, safer to the American consumer.

While EPA has not completed reregistration for the 50,000 agricultural chemicals, there is no requirement that any of these chemicals be tested in combination. We are not only concerned about the 50,000 chemicals standing alone but what about when they are combined? And that happens often.

The U.S. Public Interest Group reported to the subcommittee that a sample 1-day diet consisting of three meals may contain 54 different pesticides that cause cancer in animals or humans. We also discovered that children are being harmed by the very fruits and vegetables that are necessary for them to grow strong and healthy. In proportion, children consume a much higher quantity of fruits and vegetables than do adults. Pesticides used on these crops may cause an unacceptable health risk to these children.

The bill we offer addresses many of the deficiencies in the pesticide regulatory process to protect public health. This act will enable EPA to remove a pesticide from the market when the initial data shows it to be a public health risk. Our act will establish a sunset provision, requiring periodic expiration of pesticide registrations. This act will require the EPA to consider health risks to children and other sensitive populations. This act will require the EPA to consider the cumulative effects of pesticides in food. The act will require the Scientific Advisory Panel to include, at a minimum, one public health specialist and one pediatrician, as indicated by the Senator from Connecticut, and for the reasons indicated by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. President, there are over 30 bills pending before the 101st Congress, to address the many issues associated with food safety. The concrete changes to the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act that we set forth in the bill will prevent risk to public health from pesticide exposure. I urge my colleagues to review and support this very important legislation.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 2626. A bill for the relief of the Pottawatomi Indian Nation in Canada; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RELIEF OF POTTAWATOMI INDIAN NATION

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce a bill to provide an opportunity for the Pottawatomi Indiana Tribe of Canada to bring a claim in the U.S. Claims Court.

This legislation is intended to settle, at long last, a very old claim against the United States by conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the case on its merits.

Mr. President, the origins of this claim begin in the latter part of the 18th century, and are intricately intertwined with the Wisconsin Pottawatomi Tribes. However, because the Canadian group resettled in what is now Canada, their claims against the United States have been barred on jurisdictional grounds.

From 1795 to 1833, the United States entered into 12 treaties with the Pottawatomi Indians who resided on lands located in what are now the States of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin. The treatymaking culminated with the September 26, 1833 Treaty of Chicago when the Pottawatomi Nation ceded lands on the western shore of Lake Michigan in return for reservation lands west of the Mississippi River and annual payments in perpetuity.

The Wisconsin Pottawatomi were not signatories to the Treaty of Chicago and refused to move west. About 2,000 to 3,000 fled to Canada, with 500 remaining in Wisconsin and Michigan. The Indians who did move West received 5 million acres of land near what is now Council Bluffs, IA, along with other monetary and nonmonetary considerations. The Wisconsin Pottawatomis declared that the bands which negotiated the treaties had no right to cede homes and lands in Wisconsin. As is true with many other American Indian tribes, the forced removal westward was devastating.

According to one document prepared by a tribal attorney:

> Over one-half of the Indians who were removed West pursuant to per capital Government transportation contracts died en route. Those who reached Iowa were almost immediately removed to inhospitable parts of Kansas. About one-half the Indians removed West and nearly all the remainder fled to Canada. Official files of the Canadian and United States Governments disclose that the Indians who fled to Canada were in a substantial number of cases pursued by troops and departed without their horses or any of their possessions other than the clothes on their backs. (Page 3, of memo 10/7/49 prepared by tribal attorney in response to questions raised in hearings conducted by the House Committee on Public Lands on 6/7/49 and 7/6/49 on H.R. 4726, a bill that would have sent the claim to the newly established Indian Claims Commission.)

Congress learned in 1864 that the Indians who had not removed to the West had not received their share of tribal funds. By the act of June 25, 1864 (13 Stat. 172) Congress declared that no forfeiture had occurred and directed that the Indians' share "should be held in the Treasury and retained to their credit until such time as they might remove to the then home of the tribe in Kansas" (House Report 470, 64th Congress, p. 5, as quoted on page 3 of memo dated October 7, 1949).

By the Act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 380) Congress directed the Secretary of the Interior to investigate claims made by the Pottawatomi Indians of Wisconsin. Dr. Wooster of the BIA spent 2 years on this investigation and made an enrollment of the Wisconsin Pottawatomis, of whom there were 2,007, 457 in Wisconsin and Michigan and 1,550 in Canada. The letter report to Congress from Secretary of the Interior James R. Garfield, dated April 1, 1908 gave the results of the investigation. Congress thereafter appropriated $447,339 in a series of Acts from June 30, 1913 to May 29, 1928 to pay the claims of those Indians in the United States. The Canadian Pottawatomi Indians' share of the tribal funds has never been paid although, as stated above, the legislative history of the 1906 Act shows that Congress believed the tribe's failure to move West did not mean a forfeiture of its entitlement.

In 1948, the Pottawatomis sued in the Court of Claims for recovery of damages. (Hannahville Indian Community versus U.S.) The Canadian band was included in the original pleading but the Court of Claims dismissed their part of the claim ruling the Court had no jurisdiction. The Hannahville case was finally decided in 1983.

There are about 10,000 Pottawatomi descendants now living in Canada. Given the 1906 amount calculated at 4 percent per annum (the measure of just compensation) the claim, if meritorious, would be worth about several million dollars. Both the Forest County Pottawatomi Community and the Hannahville Indian Pottawatomi Community support the efforts the Canadian Pottawatomi to have their claims against the United States settled.●

By Mr. McCAIN:

S. 2627. A bill to impose sanctions against persons who engage in the trade of, or assist others in the trade of, missile technology which could be used in the construction of certain ballistic missile systems, or who engage in the trade or use of, biological, chemical, or nuclear weapons, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION CONTROL ACT

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Weapons of Mass Destruction Control Act. This act provides a comprehensive approach to fighting the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, and the means to deliver them; the most urgent threat to peace and humanity that we face in the 1990's.

This legislation is a critical step in developing a coherent policy toward proliferation, and treating the threat of proliferation with the seriousness it deserves.

THE MAIN THRUSTS OF THE PROLIFERATION CONTROL BILL

The legislation I propose today involves many detailed provisions. It is, however, easy to summarize and its vital impact on our security and that of our friends and allies is immediately apparent. The bill sets forth an eight-part approach to the problem:

First, it preserves all of the provisions of the Pell bill affecting the use of chemical and biological weapons and expands these provisions to also cover the use of nuclear weapons. Under these provisions, any country that uses weapons of mass destruction would be denied trade or financial relations with the United States and all aid, except urgent humanitarian aid, would cease. The United States would also seek to restrict that country's access to international financial institutions.

Second, it addresses the acquisition of weapons of mass destruction as well as their use. The steady growth in the number of countries acquiring such systems, and in the lethality of the weapons they are acquiring, is creating an arms race throughout the Third World that cannot be dealt with simply by applying sanctions to actual use.

Third, it makes the fight against all forms of proliferation a major national priority by providing for coordinated action between the President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, and the Secretary of Commerce to identify and restrict the export of the critical technologies needed to produce weapons of mass destruction.

Fourth, it addresses all forms of weapons of mass destruction: nuclear, chemical, and biological—not just chemical and biological. Previously pending legislation attacks the problems of proliferation or use piecemeal rather than as an integrated problem.

Fifth, it addresses the key delivery systems; long-range ballistic missiles and destabilizing long-range aircraft. Its provisions prohibit U.S. persons or companies from exporting the technologies needed to develop, or aiding in the development of, the systems necessary to delivering weapons of mass destruction. Its provisions seek to prevent foreign persons or companies from the same actions by denying their ability to do business with U.S. persons or companies.

Sixth, it provides carefully targeted sanctions against both merchants of mass destruction and nations which develop, acquire, or use such systems. Its provisions attack the economic incentives for persons or companies to assist in the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction by imposing economic sanctions of even greater cost. The use of weapons of mass destruction threatens to make the offending nation an outcast in the world community; cut off from the economic life of the world.

Seventh, it requires full exposure of the nations and companies selling such weapons and technology, and of the nations that are acquiring such systems. Recent events have shown that even nations such as Libya and Iraq are sensitive to the stigma that attaches to those who violate accepted norms of civilized behavior. The provisions of the bill seek to enlist the power of world public opinion in the cause of fighting proliferation or use of weapons of mass destruction by exposing the offending parties. The responsibilities for identifying offenders rests with the President.

Eighth, it reinforces existing treaties, agreements, and control regimes; it does not replace them. Its provisions encourage the United States to use bilateral and multilateral diplomacy to further the cause of nonproliferation and supports ongoing U.N. initiatives. The bill gives the United States the lead in future diplomacy by setting a clear standard for the rest of the world.

Ninth, it has safeguards to protect persons or companies that inadvertently provided a restricted technology to another country while acting in good faith with existing law.

THE GROWING PROBLEM OF PROLIFERATION

Mr. President, we cannot tolerate a future in which we finally bring the United States and Soviet arms race under control, only to see an even more serious and less controllable arms race develop in the Third World.

It is also clear that the threat of such a future is all too real. We have not gone through a month during the last year without some new form of tangible evidence that many Third World states are actively acquiring weapons of mass destruction, and the means to deliver them.

The Director of Central Intelligence and other senior intelligence officials have warned us that 16 countries already have chemical weapons, and that 12 of them are in the Third World. We have been told that these countries include states like Iran, Iraq, Libya, North Korea, and Syria.

We have had similar warnings from intelligence officials and outside experts that several nations are actively developing biological weapons, if they do not already have stock piles of such weapons. The Director of Naval Intelligence has recently told us that these nations include Syria, as well as Iraq.

We have seen equally threatening developments in nuclear proliferation. A recent study by the Carnegie Endowment has made it clear that the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty is failing to achieve its objective in terms of both supplier and buyer countries. Proliferation is taking place in nations as diverse as Argentina, Brazil, India, Iraq, Iran, North Korea, Pakistan, and South Africa. Several of these countries are becoming suppliers of nuclear weapons material and technology as well, and other emerging suppliers include the PRC, South Korea, Spain, and Taiwan.

Estimates of the number of nations that are working on long range missiles, or seeking to acquire them, are classified, but it is clear from the press that they already include nearly 20 nations, and countries like Argentina, Brazil, Egypt, India, Iran, Iraq, Israel, North Korea, South Korea, Libya, Pakistan, Saudia Arabia, South Yemen, Syria, and a number of others. It is interesting to note that a recent intelligence estimate of the nations that will have such missiles by 1995, unless much more stringent action is taken, was three pages long.

It is painfully clear that proliferation does not involve a single type of weapon of mass destruction, that long-range delivery systems threaten to proliferate throughout the world by the mid-1990's, and that our existing framework of treaties and agreements threatens to become a Potemkin village—a facade that hide the grim reality of massive threat to world peace and all mankind.

THE NEED FOR COMPREHENSIVE LEGISLATION TO FIGHT PROLIFERATION

The issue, Mr. President, is not so much the existence of the problem, as what to do about it. Ever since the Iran-Iraq war demonstrated the fact that proliferation is not a theoretical threat, but one that kills thousands of innocent people, this body and the executive branch have attempted to find ways to come to grips with the problem.

In every case, however, the resulting solutions have tried to deal with the problem by providing piecemeal remedies. They have targeted individual types of weapons, specific countries or types of countries.

Further, most of these solutions have temporized about the need to take firm and decisive action. They have avoided meaningful sanctions and even meaningful disclosure of the names of the sellers and buyers of weapons of mass destruction.

THE ROLE OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH

The Bush administration has sounded the right warnings, and the President has shown real leadership in warning the world about the risks we face. The bureaucratic execution of his policy, however, lacks any clear arms control strategy to deal with proliferation.

The various agencies within the executive branch have been caught up in internal debates. They have been slow to act and even slow to comment on the legislation proposed by Members of this body.

When the bureaucracy has acted, it has either acted in the role of naysayer or in the direction of avoiding effective measures on the grounds that these might hurt our efforts to achieve other foreign policy objectives. Long after it is clear that discussion and international meetings are not enough, the bureaucracy temporizes and focuses on ineffective half-measures.

THE ROLE OF THE CONGRESS

We in Congress have followed a somewhat similar course. Individual Senators and Congressmen have proposed useful legislation to deal with parts of the problem. I have worked closely with Senator GORE and Congressman BERMAN on a bill to deal with missile proliferation. I have cosponsored complementary legislation with Senator BINGAMAN.

I have cosponsored legislation to fight the proliferation of chemical and biological weapons by Senator DOLE and Senator PELL and resolutions to strengthen the fight against nuclear proliferation by Senator GLENN. In fact, I have drawn on their work, and that of their staffs, in creating this comprehensive bill I am introducing today.

The fact remains, however, that legislation has not moved forward in even a single area. In the 7 years since Iraq first began to make large-scale use of poison gas in the Iran-Iraq war, we have not passed a single bill that both looks beyond a narrow handful of countries and goes beyond largely exhortative words to require substantive action.

It shows that in spite of the horrors of Halabjah—where both Iraq and Iran used poisoned gas against a civilian target and killed thousands of innocent men, women, and children—we have not been able to move a single major piece of legislation forward to the point where it has the force of law.

Even if we did, the legislation now being considered by various committees deals with limited aspects of the problem of proliferation. It ignores what we have already been told by many of the countries that are proliferating: That they will not halt their actions if their rival or enemy continues to proliferate other types of weapons. It ignores the fact that partial sanctions penalize one group of sellers and not others, and that we are often acting to limit sales of U.S. manufacturers, but are taking no action to penalize the foreign companies that are the chief source of the problem.

SETTING THE RIGHT PRIORITIES: FIGHTING PROLIFERATION SHOULD NOT BE STOPPED BY SENSITIVITIES OVER "SOVEREIGNTY" AND "EXTRATERRITORIALITY"

More broadly, we have failed to give the issue of proliferation the priority it deserves. We have let issues like sovereignty and the sensitivity of Third World states distract us from the need for effective action.

THE ISSUE OF SOVEREIGNTY

We have let our sensitivity to the legitimate concerns of Third World and developing states lead us to ignore the fact that taking peaceful political and economic action to protect humanity and our own survival is scarcely an infringement on the sovereignty of other states. As a result, we have failed to develop legislation that puts sufficient pressure on buyer states.

This is why I am proposing legislation that recognizes that we have a sovereign right to take peaceful measures to block threats to our security and world peace. I am proposing legislation that relies on public exposure and use of the immense power of the American economy to put pressure on both the buyers and sellers of mass destruction, and which avoids direct intervention of any kind.

The vast majority of countries agree that weapons of mass destruction go far beyond the normal limits of self-defense and that their acquisition and use is not an internal matter. Weapons of mass destruction only exist to threaten or attack other states. They present a constant risk of genocide, and they threaten all humanity.

The U.N. General Assembly has passed several resolutions that refute the idea that nations have a sovereign right to acquire weapons of mass destruction. The General Assembly took this action on November 20, 1987, and strengthened it with Resolution 43/72 on December 7, 1988.

The United States has long understood the risks inherent in its possession of weapons of mass destruction, and the fact that even the stable pattern of deterrence between the superpowers could thrust the world into uncontrollable conflict.

More than a decade ago, the United States agreed to destroy all its biological weapons. The United States is actively seeking to reduce its present stockpiles of nuclear forces. President Reagan set the goal of moving on from START to abolish all nuclear weapons, and President Bush has set the goal of abolishing all chemical weapons.

We have recently heard similar words from the Soviet Union and the PRC, and from many of our European allies. It is clear that all the Eastern European States—except Albania—support such policies. Leading Third World states like Egypt are now leading regional efforts at arms control.

Israel's leadership has actively called for a nuclear free zone in the U.N. General Assembly ever since 1980—a call that Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir reiterated before the United Nations in June 1988. Arms control, and not proliferation, is the legitimate concern of every sovereign nation.

THE PROBLEM OF EXTRATERRITORIALITY

Our existing legislative efforts have also bogged down in an equally unrealistic debate over extraterritoriality which—if taken seriously—means we can take no action against the buyers and sellers of mass destruction that are not operating on American soil. The fact remains, however, that it is the power of the American market for high technology, and the sale of American technology, which is the primary tool we can use to give teeth to what today are empty agreements.

The character and self-restraint of "merchants of death" has not improved since the 19th century. As long as they can sell without effective penalty, and taken advantage of weak or nonexistent legal restraints in foreign countries, these merchants will sell.

It is only when companies and nations understand that they risk far greater losses than they can possibly gain from selling the tools and technology of mass destruction that they will take effective action or avoid selling such tools and technology.

Similarly, nations which proliferate need to understand that we will not ignore their actions out of temporary convenience or because of competing foreign policy priorities. We need to make it clear that we will oppose all forms of proliferation, and do so even when our friends are involved, and even when we have other interests with them.

THERE ARE NO GOOD PROLIFERATORS

Our current approach toward proliferation has tended to divide the world into good proliferators and bad proliferators, and to take action only against the proliferators who are actively hostile to the United States. However, there are no good proliferators.

No one can guarantee that turbulent states in turbulent regions remain friendly. No one can guarantee that what seem to be stable regional patterns of deterrences remain stable. No one can hope to create regional agreements where only one side is asked to halt proliferation.

Further, the threat posed by proliferation cannot be measured in terms of today's political climate and today's military risks. It is the cumulative result of current trends extended indefinitely into the future. To paraphrase one of the most famous quotes about diplomacy—nations do not have permanent allies, but they are permanent targets.

THE NEED FOR TIMELY ACTION

Mr. President, in developing this bill, I have drawn on the work of many of my colleagues. I recognize that this is a complex subject. I do feel, however, that we must stop the current pattern of treating the issue of proliferation in a piecemeal fashion, and the current pattern of delay. I believe that the legislation I am proposing is the kind of legislation we need to pass, and I believe that it is the kind of legislation we need to pass as soon as we can.

Mr. President, there are some problems too important to ignore until they become crises. We may only face limited regional threats today, but they will be threats to our forces in Asia and the Middle East tomorrow, if they are not threats already. By the mid-1990's, they will be massive threats to friendly and allied nations throughout the world, and by the end of the 1990's, they will be threats to our territory.

Equally important, we have a moral responsibility. I do not believe we can wait to act until another Halabjah focuses our attention on the horror such weapons inevitably inflict. Half a century ago, we turned a blind eye to the very real threat to millions of Jews with results that none of us can ever forget. We now know all too well that genocide can be a grim reality, and we must never ignore such risks again.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill I am introducing be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2627

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Weapons of Mass Destruction Control Act".

SEC. 2. STATEMENT OF POLICY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) It is the policy of the United States that all appropriate measures should be taken—

(A) to discourage the use, proliferation, development, and production of the weapons, material, and technology necessary and intended for the production of biological weapons, chemical weapons, and nuclear weapons and missiles capable of delivering weapons of mass destruction;

(B) to discourage Communist-bloc countries from aiding and abetting other countries from acquiring such weapons, material, and technology;

(C) to take such action as may be necessary to prohibit the flow of United States materials, equipment, and technology that would assist foreign countries in acquiring the ability to produce or acquire missiles that can deliver weapons of mass destruction, including missiles, warheads, and weaponization technology, targeting technology, test and evaluation technology, and range and weapons effect measurement technology;

(D) to discourage private persons in each non-Communist country from assisting any other country to acquire such material and technology; and

(E) to monitor closely the development, sale, acquisition, and deployment of weapons of mass destruction, missiles, destabilizing offensive aircraft, and other delivery systems that can be used to deliver weapons of mass destruction, and to make every effort to discourage such activity when such delivery systems seem likely to be used for such purposes.

(2) It is further the policy of the United States to pursue the policy expressed in paragraph (1) to the extent practicable and effective through bilateral and multilateral diplomacy.

(3) It is further the policy of the United States to take unilateral actions to pursue the objectives expressed in paragraph (1) until such time as bilateral and multilateral efforts prove effective and, at that time, to support and enhance those bilateral and multilateral efforts.

TITLE I—SANCTIONS AGAINST THE USE OF NUCLEAR, CHEMICAL, AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS

SEC. 101. SANCTIONS FOR THE USE OF NUCLEAR, CHEMICAL, OR BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS.

(a) DETERMINATION BY THE PRESIDENT.—(1) Whenever information becomes available to the United States Government indicating the substantial possibility that, on or after the date of enactment of this Act, a foreign country has used nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons, the President shall, within 60 days of the receipt of such information by the United States Government, determine whether that foreign country, on or after such date, has used nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons in violation of international law or has used nuclear, lethal chemical, or biological weapons against its own nationals.

(2) Not later than 60 days after the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, after consultation with the ranking minority member of such Committee, or the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, after consultation with the ranking minority member of such Committee, request the President to make a determination whether or not a foreign country, on or after the date of enactment of this Act, has used nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons in violation of international law or has used nuclear, lethal chemical, or biological weapons against its own nationals, the President shall make such determination and so report in writing to the chairmen of such committees.

(3) In making a determination under paragraph (1) or (2), the President shall consider the following:

(A) All physical and circumstantial evidence available bearing on the possible use of such weapons.

(B) All information provided by alleged victims, witnesses, and independent observers.

(C) The extent of the availability of the weapons in question to the purported user.

(D) All official and unofficial statements bearing on the possible use of such weapons.

(E) Whether, and to what extent, the country in question is willing to honor a request from the Secretary General of the United Nations to grant timely access to a United Nations fact-finding team to investigate the possibility of nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons use or to grant such access to other legitimate outside parties.

(b) SANCTIONS.—In the event of a Presidential determination under subsection (a) that, on or after the date of enactment of this Act, a foreign country has used nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons in violation of international law or has used nuclear, lethal chemical, or biological weapons against its own nationals, then the President shall—

SEC. 102. WAIVER.

The President may waive the applicability of any or all of the sanctions specified in section 101 with respect to a specific country for a period of not to exceed nine months beginning on the date of the determination by the President of use by that country of nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons in violation of international law, or the use of nuclear, lethal chemical, or biological weapons against its own nationals, if the President determines that such waiver is in the national interest of the United States and so certifies to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. The President shall submit in writing with such certification a statement containing a detailed explanation of the national interest requiring a waiver. The explanation may include a classified addendum if necessary.

SEC. 103. NOTIFICATION.

Not later than five days after the President imposes any sanction described in section 101 against a country or waives the applicability of any such sanction pursuant to section 102, the President shall so notify the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate in writing.

SEC. 104. CONTRACT SANCTITY.

(a) SANCTIONS NOT APPLIED TO EXISTING CONTRACTS.—No sanction described in paragraphs (5) through (10) of section 101 shall apply to any activity pursuant to any contract or international agreement entered into before the date of the appropriate presidential determination under section 101(a) unless the President determines, on a case-by-case basis, that to so apply the sanction would prevent the performance of a contract or agreement that would have the effect of assisting a country in using chemical or biological weapons in violation of international law or in using lethal chemical or biological weapons against its own nationals.

(b) SANCTIONS APPLIED TO EXISTING CONTRACTS.—The sanctions described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) of section 101 shall apply to contracts and agreements, without regard to the date such contracts or agreements were entered into, except that such sanctions shall not apply to any contract or agreement entered into before the date of the appropriate presidential determination under section 101(a) if the President determines that the application of such sanction would be detrimental to the national security interests of the United States.

SEC. 105. REMOVAL OF SANCTIONS.

The President may remove the sanctions imposed pursuant to section 101 if the President determines and so certifies to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate that the country against which the sanction is imposed—

(1) has renounced any use of nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons in violation of international law, or any use of nuclear, lethal chemical, or biological weapons against its own nationals, and has provided reliable assurances to that effect; and

(2) has made satisfactory restitution to those affected in its earlier use of nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons in violation of international law or in its earlier use of nuclear, lethal chemical, or biological weapons against its own nationals.

SEC. 106. UNITED NATIONS INVOLVEMENT.

The President is urged to give full support to—

(1) the United Nations Security Council, in furtherance of Security Council Resolution 620, adopted August 26, 1988, in developing sanctions comparable to those enumerated in section 101, to be imposed in the event that any country uses nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons in violation of international law; and

(2) the creation of an effective multilateral means of monitoring and reporting regularly on commerce in chemical equipment, materials, and technology applicable to the attainment of a nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons capability.

(B) Denial of the transfer of all or selected technology in aviation, electronics, missiles, or space systems or space-related equipment under the control of the United States Government, except for items the export of which to a controlled country (within the meaning of the Export Administration Act of 1979) would require only notification of the participating governments of the Coordinating Committee on Export Controls.

(c) EXCEPTIONS.—Paragraphs (1)(B) and (2)(B) of subsection (b) shall not apply with respect to any contract that provides for the supply of products or services valued at whichever is the lesser of—

(f) INAPPLICABILITY TO PERSONS COMPLYING WITH FOREIGN LAWS.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any export, transfer, or other trade activity carried out in good faith by any person if (1) the export, transfer, or other trade activity is in compliance with the laws of the country from which the export, transfer, or other activity is being carried out, and (2) that country controls the export of internationally controlled missile technology pursuant to an international agreement to which the United States is a party.

(g) SUSPENSION OF SANCTIONS.—The President may suspend all or part of any sanctions that have been imposed under this section against a person on account of acts described in subsection (a) if a country that controls the export of internationally controlled missile technology pursuant to an international agreement to which the United States is a party is taking judicial or other enforcement action against that person on account of those acts. The President may terminate the sanctions if the President determines that, pursuant to that country's enforcement action, the person has been found not to have committed those acts or has been severely punished under that country's laws on account of those acts.

(3) For purposes of this section, the term "listed country" means a country included on the list compiled by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a)(2).

(c) CONSULTATION.—(1) The Secretary may approve or deny an application for the export of goods or technology under this section only after consultation with the Secretary of State. (2) No department or agency of the Federal Government may procure any goods or services from any foreign person that is engaging, or has in the past 10 years engaged, in any activity described in subsection (d)(2). The provisions of the preceding sentence shall cease to apply in the case of a foreign country two years after the date on which the President certifies to Congress that—

SEC. 207. REGULATIONS.

The President may prescribe such regulations as are necessary to carry out this Act.

SEC. 208. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. DODD):

S. 2628. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to reauthorize certain National Institute of Mental Health grants and to improve provisions concerning the State comprehensive mental health services plan, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

MENTAL HEALTH AMENDMENTS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Mental Health Amendments of 1990.

This legislation reauthorizes the authority of the National Institute of Mental Health to conduct demonstrations to improve the delivery of mental health services, reauthorizes the State mental health services plan development grants, and clarifies State requirements for planning and implementation of comprehensive State mental health community-based services.

DEMONSTRATIONS

NIMH is authorized to conduct demonstrations in a variety of key mental health areas, including grants to plan, coordinate, and improve community mental health services to seriously mentally ill adults, children, and the elderly; grants for prevention of youth suicide; grants to improve recognition, treatment, and assessment of depressive disorders, and to meet other priority needs. Grants conducted under this authority have been immensely effective in improving services to the mentally ill and reducing hospitalization rates. There is now a particular focus on children, one of the most underserved of the populations in need of mental health services. Continuation of these programs is extremely important in linking research findings to improved practice in the field.

The bill would authorize $60 million for 1991, $62 million for 1992, and $65 million for fiscal year 1993.

PLANNING GRANTS

Under legislation enacted in 1986, States are required to plan and implement comprehensive community-based programs of care for the seriously mentally ill. Such programs are essential in providing humane treatment for the seriously mentally ill and allowing them to perform to their full potential. In addition, community-based programs actually save money through reduced use of inpatient hospital care. But despite the moral imperative to provide all seriously mentally ill Americans with effective community-based services, most States and communities are still failing to do an adequate job.

The planning and implementation process mandated under the 1986 law is showing the potential to make a major contribution to this problem. All States have completed plans which are generally viewed as high quality, and the crucial implementation phase is now beginning.

The small planning grant program provides funds to States to hire extra staff to meet the requirements of the law and to fund broad-based advisory groups. Particularly in smaller States, this modest funding—minimum grants are $150,000—has often been crucial in assisting States to meet the requirements. This legislation would reauthorize the planning grants for an additional 3 years at $5 million.

STATE PLAN AMENDMENTS

The amendments included under this section of the legislation make primarily technical changes in the current law. The planning and implementation requirements are clarified to emphasize that seriously mentally ill children must be included in the scope of the State plan, the requirement for involvement of broad-based advisory panels in the development and implementation of the plan is strengthened, and technical corrections and improvements are made in several other aspects of the statute.

The programs covered in this legislation hold the promise of improving the lives of millions of mentally ill patients and their families. I urge their prompt adoption.

S. 2632. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to reauthorize the National Center for Health Statistics; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

REAUTHORIZATION OF CERTAIN HEALTH PROGRAMS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am introducing today legislation to reauthorize four of the most important, cost-effective public health programs. These programs, which are administered by the Federal Centers for Disease Control, include: the Immunization Programs; the Tuberculosis Program; the Injury Control Program; and the National Center for Health Statistics.

The CDC's Immunization Programs provide grants to States for the purchase of vaccines and other assistance for the Nation's immunization programs. Despite the success of the immunization programs in reducing the incidence of infectious and communicable diseases, we need to do more in some areas. For example, the Nation is currently facing a measles epidemic. If current trends continue, as many as 30,000 cases of measles could occur this year; in 1983, only 1,500 cases of measles were reported. Last year, 40 children died of measles; during the first 4 months of this year alone, another 40 deaths have occurred.

To address this national epidemic and the other needs of the immunization program, the legislation I am introducing today would authorize $200 million for the immunization programs in fiscal year 1991 and such sums as may be necessary through 1995. This authorization level is sufficient to double the dosage of the measles vaccine, as recommended by the CDC's Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices and the American Academy of Pediatrics, and for target outreach efforts to high-risk populations which are not receiving the first dose of the vaccine. This funding level will also support greater screening for hepatitis B and the development of new vaccines for chicken pox and other diseases.

In addition, this legislation would authorize $5 million to maintain a 6-month vaccine stockpile and $34 million for the National Vaccine Program, which provides interagency coordination of the Federal Government's immunization programs through the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Health at HHS.

The reauthorization for the CDC's Tuberculosis Program is an essential step in working for the elimination of tuberculosis. An estimated 10 million Americans are infected with this disease. If symptoms are left untreated, about 50 percent of patients die within 2 years. The incidence is increasing, with outbreaks among children, nursing home residents, people with AIDS, and the homeless. The CDC Program provides funding for prevention and control projects in the States and territories, and 10 percent of funding is used to support priority operational research and training activities. The program would be reauthorized for $36 million in fiscal year 1991 and such sums as may be necessary through 1995 to continue the effort.

The financial and human costs of injury in America are immense; the total lifetime cost of injuries occurring in 1988 is estimated to be $180 billion. Injuries resulting from motor vehicles, falls, and accidential shootings are the leading cause of death for those under the age of 45. Since 1986, the CDC has studied the incidence of injuries and conducted research and educational activities on the prevention of injuries. The CDC Injury Control Program would be reauthorized for $40 million in 1991, and such sums as may be necessary through 1995, to allow for an increased effort by the Federal Government in preventing injury.

The National Center for Health Statistics [NCHS] is the primary source of Federal Government health statistics which are essential to health care policymakers and researchers. NCHS maintains four major data systems: The National Vital Statistics System; the National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey; the National Health Care Survey; and the National Health Interview Survey. In addition to these principal data systems, NCHS conducts a number of other targeted surveys, including data regarding HIV and AIDS, maternal and infant health, and aging, and coordinates closely with other Federal agencies to provide assistance in health care data collection to serve the needs of the Federal Government. The legislation I am introducing today would reauthorize $58 million for NCHS in 1991, and such sums as may be necessary through 1995. The legislation would also assure the uninterrupted collection of the National Health Interview Survey which, since 1957, has been the principal source of Federal data on the general health, illness, and disability status of the American population.

As the Nation continues to address the needs of providing access to health care at an affordable cost, the prevention of health problems is one of the most effective tools available in reducing health care costs and protecting the public health. The CDC's efforts to prevent infectious diseases, tuberculosis, and injury serve this important goal, and the collection of health care data provides the information necessary to help us make effective decisions regarding the health care needs of America. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting the reauthorization of these valuable public health programs.

By Mr. CONRAD:

S. 2634. A bill to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act and the Farm Credit Act of 1971 to extend and improve farm credit programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

AGRICULTURE CREDIT ACT OF 1990

● Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, it is my pleasure to rise today to introduce the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Amendments Act of 1990. My hope is that these provisions will be adopted for the credit title of the 1990 farm bill.

This bill reflects my efforts since early 1989 to oversee the Farmers Home Administration and the Farm Credit Service. In total, I have held eight hearings of my Subcommittee on Agricultural Credit on these agencies. I have reviewed the problems and successes with FmHA both in its regular program responsibilities and in its implementation of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987.

FmHA has gone through tremendous changes in the last decade. Its funding has declined; its delinquencies have risen; its staff has declined. Farm borrowers experienced the worst agricultural depression during the 1980's since recordkeeping began in 1910. FmHA was mandated by Congress to implement a massive restructuring program to resolve its overwhelming loan delinquencies. As a result of these and other events, the agency has some basic problems; some inherent, some resolvable.

In my hearings, I asked the following questions. Is FmHA meeting its mission of providing short-term assistance to financially troubled borrowers, and assisting beginning farmers to start up their operations? Is it helping to prepare beginning farmers for commercial credit by supervising and assisting in their farm management training? How well does the guaranteed program serve FmHA's mission? What changes are needed to expand the use of the guaranteed loan program? How can we ensure that FmHA improves its processing and oversight of these guaranteed loans so that losses under this program do not increase, as some have predicted?

The answers I heard to those questions raised concerns about the low graduation rate of FmHA borrowers to commercial credit, the fact that little FmHA direct loan assistance is going to beginning borrowers, and few guaranteed loans are going to graduating FmHA direct loan borrowers or to new beginning borrowers.

I was particularly concerned about the results I heard of the shift from direct to guaranteed loans mandated in the 1985 farm bill. Funding for direct loans has dropped 77 percent since 1985, and authorizations for guaranteed loans have more than doubled. Yet despite signficant authorizations, the guaranteed lending program has not been fully utilized. Only 35 percent of the $3.3 billion authorized in fiscal year 1989 was obligated. In 1989, FmHA received three times the number of applications for direct loans as for guaranteed loans. Because these funds were not fully used, and because of the severe drop in direct loan funding, this shift in funding has resulted in a 65-percent drop in operating loans made by FmHA, and a 59-percent drop in farm ownership loans made. These statistics have led me to question whether the guaranteed lending program can fully replace the cut in direct loan funds.

I also heard about the problems with the FmHA's loan application process. I learned that county supervisors are often overworked, and have little time to provide personal supervision to beginning borrowers. In addition, I learned about the inadequacies of FmHA's guaranteed loan making process and its monitoring of lenders' servicing requirements.

I heard from many experts during the course of my hearings. The bill I am introducing today reflects their suggestions. I believe that it will go a long way toward returning FmHA to its proper role of lender of last resort and of supervised credit. This goal is supported by the administration.

This bill presents an orderly program designed to enable FmHA borrowers to develop the skills and equity necessary to achieve a successful farm business and compete for commercial credit. It would also make funds available to FmHA to assist new applicants. This program includes planning for graduation, enhancing FmHA's loan assessment, providing borrowers and FmHA staff with training in financial and farm management, and increasing FmHA's supervision of borrowers.

This proposal would require the Secretary to plan for graduation the day a new loan is made. The graduation plan would include a goal graduation date of 10 years from the date the first direct or guaranteed loan is received, and 15 years for combined FmHA assistance. This proposal would not end eligibility for loans if graduation is not achieved by the target date, but require that the need for the extension of further new credit is due to circumstances beyond the control of the borrower such as a natural disaster.

FmHA is authorized to provide borrowers with financial and farm management training by contracting with a private, State or nonprofit credit counseling services, including community colleges, the Extension Service, State departments of agriculture, or nonprofit organizations.

This proposal provides an enhanced loan assessment process, including a determination of whether and how FmHA credit can help an individual applicant or borrower achieve the farm operation goals within the terms and timeframe allowed by FmHA, and to enhance the supervision of loans made in order to identify and resolve problems early, and ensure that borrowers meet their graduation goals.

The Secretary would be authorized to contract with a credit counseling service, including those entities eligible to provide borrower training, to provide this loan assessment, as the Secretary deems necessary. This loan assessment would also extend to the review of direct and guaranteed loans, to gauge the borrower's progress in meeting the goals for the farm operation and graduation. In addition, when delinquencies occur, FmHA or the contracting credit counseling service will provide problem assessment to determine the cause and corrective action needed.

This proposal would also require the Secretary to provide adequate training to FmHA employees on credit analysis and financial and farm management to enable them to make better decisions on direct and guaranteed loan applications, and to ensure proper supervision of farmer program loans. County supervisors or their assistants would be required to regularly visit each borrower's farm or ranch to consult with the borrower about the borrower's financial condition and whether the farm operation is meeting the goals of the farming and graduation plan.

Mr. President, over 50 percent of farm assets are currently held by farmers over 55 years old. The next 10 years will provide us with a nearly unprecedented opportunity to establish new farmers. My proposal would target 50 percent of inventory property available for sale toward beginning farmers, in order to assist in the transfer of farming to the next generation. I believe that the targeting of FmHA inventory property is one of the best ways that the Government can help in this effort.

My proposal seeks to increase the use of the guaranteed loan program in two ways. First, it would encourage the establishment of a market placement program using FmHA guarantees to help applicants obtain commercial credit.

Second, my proposal would also replace the current interest rate reduction programs with a program which allows FmHA to pay up to the full cost of reducing the interest rate on a guaranteed loan. The maximum reduction may be no lower than the limited resource rate for direct loans. The program will include the possibility of a 50/50 cost share match with the lender to reduce the interest rate, as in the current Interest Rate Reduction Program. It is my hope that this program will increase lenders' interest in the guaranteed program, and enable more direct loan borrowers to shift to guaranteed loans.

The bill I am introducing today also resolves FmHA implementation problems which have arisen through the implementation of the act. Some of the provisions in this bill clarify the original intent of Congress; others address issues which were not considered or envisioned by Members when writing the law. The goal of this bill is to ensure that the act is implemented the way Congress intended, and that the restructuring process it establishes will be used by FmHA whenever a delinquency occurs, or when another farm crisis arises due to declines in land values or prices, or natural disaster, as Congress intended.

The act requires the Federal Government to get the maximum return on delinquent debt through loan servicing or foreclosure. FmHA is acknowledging the losses it accumulated prior to passage of the act, and is taking steps to resolve that delinquent debt. If FmHA is implementing the law correctly, the Federal Government is receiving more money than it would have if it had foreclosed on all those delinquent loans.

Mr. President, I can report that the act is saving the Government money. FmHA statistics show that loan servicing actions that included debt writedown, and buyout of delinquent debt at the net recovery value, has reduced Government losses by over $400 million. That means the Government would have received $400 million less if it had foreclosed on those borrowers. Yet these statistics represent less than one-third of the debt restructuring activity completed by FmHA. With all the attention paid to this most dramatic type of assistance, we often forget how many borrowers have been helped by other types of loan servicing. Unfortunately, FmHA has not kept record of the losses avoided due to these actions. I can say with certainty that the other restructuring activities, which include rescheduling, reamortization and consolidation of loans, have also saved the Government money.

Thus far, under the act, over 27,125 borrowers who were in critical financial trouble have been restructured, or have bought out their loans at the net recovery value of the collateral, and are able to continue farming. In addition, they are able to pay their other rural creditors and continue to bring them business. Over 6,000 borrowers have received debt settlement, and are able to get on with their lives, out from under the burden of debt that they could never repay.

Under the 1987 act, borrowers rights are explicit, and FmHA is notifying borrowers of and observing these rights. The National Appeals Staff is providing objective reviews of disputed FmHA decisions, and overturning decisions when necessary. Overall, Mr. President, I believe the act is working.

Let me go over some of the provisions in this bill related to the act. Section 4 of this bill is intended to make the appeals process move more smoothly. There are numerous instances in which FmHA has not properly resumed processing of a borrower's case once an adverse FmHA decision is overturned by the National Appeals Division. This provision is designed to prevent unnecessary delay, by requiring FmHA, if an FmHA decision is overturned through the appeals process, to implement the decision within a reasonable time, unless the decision violates statute or regulation.

This section also provides applicants or recipients of FmHA loan guarantees the right to independently request an appeal of an FmHA adverse decision without the lender joining the appeal. This is significant. Currently, many lenders are unwilling to join in the appeal, and as a result, many applicants and borrowers are effectively denied appeal rights.

Section 5 of the bill would ease the burden of county committees who must select an individual to purchase inventory property when there are many equally qualified individuals seeking the purchase. It allows the county committee to draw out of a hat, if you will, the name of the purchaser from among multiple, equally qualified, eligible applicants with identical bids. In addition, it would allow FmHA to sell inventory property at the fair market value.

Sections 8, 9, 13, and 19 more fully develop congressional intent of the requirements that a borrower must have acted in good faith and that the delinquency must be due to circumstances beyond the control of the borrower, to be eligible for restructuring or net recovery value buyout. In particular, we want to clarify that borrowers who are not delinquent due to circumstances beyond their control and have not acted in good faith are not eligible for restructuring or net recovery buyout of their delinquent loans.

These provisions more fully define the "delinquency beyond the control of the borrower" criteria to ensure that borrowers who have additional, unsecured assets are required to use them to bring their loans current. This is what Congress intended when the measure was enacted in 1987. If these assets are not adequate to bring their loans current, then the borrowers are required to include the value of these assets in the calculation of the amount the borrower has available to pay on his debt, or the net recovery value of the property.

This ensures that a borrower does not receive debt forgiveness on that portion of his debt that would be repaid through the value of these assets.

In addition, these provisions prohibit FmHA from determining that a borrower has acted in bad faith when the borrower was sold security for essential living and operating expenses, but only if FmHA has denied adequate living and operating expenses under the law. Adequate income means that the farmer has the ability to pay household expenses and to operate a farm in a manner which will earn an economic return sufficient to cover current and upcoming living and operating expenses, including the repayment of debt. We also expect that a borrower who has had some income released, but not enough to cover essential living and operating expenses, and used the proceeds for living and operating expenses, will not be determined to have acted in bad faith under this exception.

In passing this bill, we intend that buyout denials based on these eligibility criteria can be appealed by the borrower just as can any adverse decision.

Section 16 would required FmHA to allow a restructured borrower a better chance of success by providing a cushion of 5 percent of the borrower's balance available for loan repayment, when this is possible. In testimony presented to me on March 5 by the General Accounting Office, it was clear that many borrowers would be in serious financial trouble if any unexpected expenses arose, or if income did not meet expectations, because FmHA is restructuring with a very tight cash-flow. We all know that farming is a risky business, and it is difficult to precisely forecast income or expenses. Therefore, it only makes sense to provide a small amount of cash-flow leeway. This margin will only be provided in cases in which a borrower can still pay more than FmHA would receive for foreclosure.

The tight restructuring that I just discussed makes me question whether some borrowers have been truly helped by the first round of loan servicing. It is clear to me that some borrowers will need additional assistance. In most cases, that will not include debt write down. However, I do not want to preclude this action in cases where it is the least cost alternative. While there are those who wish to prohibit FmHA from writing down debt in the future, to me, that is legislating that the Government will lose money. Prohibiting debt write down cuts off the most powerful tool FmHA has in its loan servicing toolbox. Other lenders write down debt when it results in their receiving more money through restructuring than they would through foreclosure. I will not agree to stop FmHA from writing down debt and restructuring loans when that is the least cost alternative for the Government. I am, however, willing to limit the number of times that a borrower can receive debt forgiveness.

Section 17 deals with effective dates of these provisions. There are still several thousand borrowers at various stages of the debt restructuring process. These borrowers applied for debt restructuring in November 1988 or August 1989. FmHA has not processed many of these applications in a timely fashion. In addition, mediations and appeals, subject to the same manpower shortage, have taken more time than many anticipated. It is my hope that we can move expeditiously to resolve these in-process cases quickly. Due to these delays, and in fairness of borrowers who have waited a very long time for FmHA to make decisions, we have decided not to make this law retroactive. The exception is the provision related to good faith and buyouts. FmHA may apply the good faith criteria to those borrowers who have not yet accepted their buyout offers, who have acted in bad faith, as determined by the agency.

In closing, I want to note that based on extensive hearings, FmHA has a hardworking, dedicated, and overworked staff. My proposal intentionally increases their supervisory role. It is my great hope that FmHA recognizes the need for and hires additional staff to begin again providing the services they need to conduct their important mission. It is my understanding that USDA has requested 500 additional staff for fiscal year 1991 for FmHA.

All in all, Mr. President, I think this bill will assist FmHA in its role of assisting financially troubled and beginning farmers. I urge my colleagues to support passage of this legislation.●

By Mr. DODD:

S. 2635. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish an Immunization Demonstration Project Program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CHILDHOOD IMMUNIZATION ACT OF 1990

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Childhood Immunization Act of 1990.

Mr. President, since the development of the first smallpox vaccine nearly 200 years ago, the use of vaccines to prevent infectious diseases has represented one of the major success stories of public health and preventive health programs. Use of vaccines against illnesses has prevented thousands of deaths each year in the United States, and has substantially reduced the morbidity resulting from disease. Major achievements of vaccination programs include the global eradication of smallpox, reduced mortality from measles, reduced incidence of polio, and a reduced incidence of cases and mortality from pertussis or whooping cough.

Childhood immunization programs represent the largest segment of immunization programs in the United States. Currently, children are routinely immunized against seven diseases: polio, measles, mumps, rubella, diphtheria, tetanus, and pertussis.

The United States has been engaged over the past 15 years in a nationwide effort to reduce morbidity and therefore, mortality due to the infectious diseases of childhood through programs of universal immunization of children. The effort involves the integration of the efforts of the public and private sectors on the National, State, and local levels.

Sadly, Mr. President, millions of American children are failing to receive immunizations that can protect them against diseases than can be prevented, such as polio, measles, and mumps. For example, if the trends in polio immunization rates that prevailed from 1980 to 1985 continue, nearly one in five children will not be fully protected against this crippling disease in the year 2000. More than 2 million preschool children will be inadequately protected against polio.

Although the United States enjoys high levels of immunization overall, the percentage of 2-year-olds who have been immunized in the United States is well below the 1990 target objective of 90 percent and has shown little progress since 1980. Moreover, considerable differences relating to levels of immunization persist with respect to race and geographic location. National survey data indicate that differences exist between white and nonwhite as well as urban poverty areas and suburban and rural areas.

For example, the percentages of children immunized in central cities are substantially lower than percentages in non-central-city regions for both preschool-age and school-entry-age children. In 1985, 31 percent of preschoolers living in U.S. central cities were not adequately immunized against polio; 30 percent were not adequately immunized against mumps.

The bill I am introducing today, the Childhood Immunization Act of 1990, would augment the major Federal program aimed at preventing and controlling vaccine preventable childhood diseases—the Immunization Program administered by the Centers for Disease Control. The bill authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Centers for Disease Control, to make grants to public and private nonprofit entities and enter into contracts with private entities to establish and support projects for the development, demonstration, and evaluation of methods for the screening, referral, and immunization of children up to 24 months of age against vaccine-preventable diseases and for the dissemination of information concerning such methods to the health professions.

The bill further requires the Secretary to utilize additional resources to implement projects that are designed to make more effective use of immunization grant resources to immunize at least 90 percent of all children by the time they reach 24 months of age.

The bill targets for immunization those children up to 2 years of age who are part of low-income and high-risk populations and geographic areas.

Mr. President, a nation's future lies with its children. Thus, the health of our children is a matter of fundamental importance to our society. Fortunately, in our country, the vast majority of children are healthy, but preventing disease among the young through immunization holds promise for even further improvements in their well-being.

Mr. President, the Childhood Immunization Act of 1990, if enacted into law, will help prevent disease among the most vulnerable in our society—our children. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the Childhood Immunization Act of 1990 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2635

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. IMMUNIZATION DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

Part B of title III of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting after section 317A (42 U.S.C. 247b-1) the following new section:

"(2) ADDITIONAL RESOURCES.—The Secretary shall utilize additional resources to implement projects under this section that are designed to make more effective use of immunization grant resources to immunize at least 90 percent of all children by the time they reach 24 months of age.

"(5) methods of dissemination of information to health and allied health professionals and to low-income and high-risk populations concerning the importance of immunization of children up to 24 months of age at the earliest medically appropriate time, and concerning possible adverse reactions associated with immunizations.

"(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—In addition to such sums as are authorized to be appropriated under section 317, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1993 for immunization demonstration project grants and contracts under this section.".●

S.J. Res. 314. Joint resolution to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the National Federation of the Blind; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF THE BLIND

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the National Federation of the Blind.

The National Federation of the Blind was founded in Wilkes-Barre, PA, on November 16, 1940 and is the largest organization of the blind in America. It has a membership of over 50,000 is organized in every State and the District of Columbia, and has local chapters in almost every community.

Since its inception, the purpose of the federation has been to achieve security, equality, and opportunity for the blind, as well as serving as a vehicle for self expression of the blind.

National recognition of the 50th anniversary of the National Federation of the Blind will also honor the memory of its founder, Dr. Jacobus tenBroek. Blind himself, Dr. tenBroek was a noted scholar of constitutional law and legal history at the University of California at Berkeley during the 1950's and 1960's. He pioneered the philosophy that blindness was a "normal characteristic," and it is not any more limiting to a person than a thousand other conditions. His exemplary work in the field of constitutional law and legal history personified this philosophy and improved the public image of blindness.

For 28 years, Dr. tenBroek was the able leader of the organized blind movement in this country and around the world. In 1968 Dr. Kenneth Jernigan succeeded him, first as president and later as executive director of the National Federation of the Blind. Through the inspiration and ability of these exceptional leaders the public perception of blindness has improved over the past 50 years. The federation's goal, "changing what it means to be blind," is now coming true.

Mr. President, the 101st Congress marks a watershed in the fight of the disabled and blind persons to gain respect and independence. Last fall, the Senate passed the Americans with Disabilities Act and I hope Mr. President, that the House of Representatives will soon follow so that we may enact this important legislation into law.

Mr. President, there are scores of talented blind individuals who are not seeking assistance, but simply an opportunity to become productive members of our society. The National Federation of the Blind's programs help blind people to become productive members of society. It is for this reason that I honor their work with this commemoration, and ask all of my colleagues to join.●

"CHAPTER 154—SPECIAL HABEAS CORPUS PROCEDURES IN CAPITAL CASES

"Sec.

"2261. Defendants subject to capital punishment and prisoners in State custody subject to capital sentence; appointment of counsel; requirement of rule of court or statute; procedures for appointment.

"2262. Mandatory stay of execution; duration; limits on stays of execution; successive petitions.
"2263. Filing of habeas corpus petition; time requirements; tolling rules.
"2264. Evidentiary hearings; scope of Federal review; district court adjudication.
"2265. Certificate of probable cause inapplicable.
"2266. Counsel in capital cases; trial and post-conviction standards.
"2267. Law controlling in Federal habeas corpus proceedings; retroactivity.
"2268. Habeas corpus time requirements.

"§ 2261. Defendants subject to capital punishment and prisoners in State custody subject to capital sentence; appointment of counsel; requirement of rule of court or statute; procedures for appointment

"(a) This chapter shall apply—

"(1) to—

"(A) cases in which the defendant is tried for a capital offense; or

"(B) cases arising under section 2254 of this title brought by prisoners in State custody who are subject to a capital sentence; and

"(2) only if subsections (b) and (c) are satisfied.

"(b) This chapter is applicable if a State established by rule of its court of last resort or by statute a mechanism for the appointment, compensation, and payment of reasonable fees and litigation expenses of competent counsel consistent with section 2266 of this title.

"(c) Any mechanism for the appointment, compensation, and reimbursement of counsel as provided in subsection (b) must offer counsel to all State defendants tried for a capital offense and all State prisoners under capital sentence and must provide for the entry of an order by a court of record—

"(1) appointing one or more counsel to represent the defendant or prisoner upon a finding that the defendant or prisoner—

"(A) is indigent and has accepted the offer; or

"(B) is unable competently to decide whether to accept or reject the offer;

"(2) finding, after a hearing, if necessary, that the defendant or prisoner has rejected the offer of counsel and made the decision with an understanding of its legal consequences; or

"(3) denying the appointment of counsel upon a finding that the defendant or prisoner is not indigent.

"(d) No counsel appointed pursuant to subsections (b) and (c) to represent—

"(1) a State defendant being tried for a capital offense; or

"(2) prisoner under capital sentence during direct appeals in the State courts, shall have previously represented the defendant or prisoner at trial or on direct appeal in the case for which the appointment is made unless the defendant or prisoner and counsel expressly request continued representation.

"(e) The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during State or Federal collateral post-conviction proceedings in a capital case shall not be a ground for relief in a proceeding arising under this chapter or section 2254 of this title. This subsection shall not preclude the appointment of different counsel at any phase of Federal post-conviction proceedings.

"§ 2262. Mandatory stay of execution; duration; limits on stays of execution; successive petitions

"(a) Upon the entry in the appropriate State court of record of an order pursuant to section 2261(c) of this title for a prisoner under capital sentence, a warrant or order setting an execution date for a State prisoner shall be stayed upon application to any court that would have jurisdiction over any proceedings filed pursuant to section 2254 of this title. The application must recite that the State has invoked the post-conviction review procedures of this chapter and that the scheduled execution is subject to stay.

"(b) A stay of execution granted pursuant to subsection (a) shall expire if—

"(1) a State prisoner fails to file a habeas corpus petition under section 2254 of this title within the time required in section 2263 of this title; or

"(2) upon completion of district court and court of appeals review under section 2254 of this title, the petition for relief is denied and—

"(A) the time for filing a petition for certiorari has expired and no petition has been filed;

"(B) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and the Supreme Court denied the petition; or

"(C) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and upon consideration of the case, the Supreme Court disposed of it in a manner that left the capital sentence undisturbed; or

"(3) before a court of competent jurisdiction, a State prisoner under capital sentence waives the right to pursue habeas corpus review under section 2254 of this title, in the presence of counsel and after having been advised of the consequences of making the waiver.

"(c) If one of the conditions in subsection (b) has occurred, no Federal court thereafter shall have the authority to enter a stay of execution or grant relief in a capital case unless—

"(1) the basis for the stay and request for relief is a claim not previously presented in the State or Federal courts;

"(2) the failure to raise the claim—

"(A) was the result of State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(B) was the result of a recognition by the Supreme Court of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable; or

"(C) is due to the fact the claim is based on facts that could have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim for State or Federal post-conviction review; and

"(3) the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient, if proven, to undermine the court's confidence in the jury's determination of guilt on the offense or offenses for which the death penalty was imposed.

"§ 2263. Filing of habeas corpus petition; time requirements; tolling rules

"Any petition for habeas corpus relief under section 2254 of this title must be filed in the appropriate district court not later than 180 days after the filing in the appropriate State court of record of an order issued in compliance with section 2261(c) of this title. The time requirements established by this section shall be tolled—

"(1) from the date that a petition for certiorari is filed in the Supreme Court until the date of final disposition of the petition if a State prisoner seeks review of a capital sentence that has been affirmed on direct appeal by the court of last resort of the State or has otherwise become final for State law purposes; and

"(2) during an additional period not to exceed 60 days, if counsel for the State prisoner—

"(A) moves for an extension of time in Federal district court that would have jurisdiction over the case upon the filing of a habeas corpus petition under section 2254 of this title; and

"(B) makes a showing of good cause for counsel's inability to file the habeas corpus petition within the 180-day period established by this section.

"§ 2264. Evidentiary hearings; scope of Federal review; district court adjudication

"(a) Whenever a State prisoner under a capital sentence files a petition for habeas corpus relief to which this chapter applies, the district court shall—

"(1) determine the sufficiency of the evidentiary record for habeas corpus review; and

"(2) conduct any requested evidentiary hearing necessary to complete the record for habeas corpus review.

"(b) Upon the development of a complete evidentiary record, the district court shall rule on the merits of the claims properly before it.

"(c)(1) except as provided in paragraph (2), a district court may refuse to consider a claim under this section if—

"(A) the prisoner previously failed to raise the claim in State court at the time and in the manner prescribed by State law;

"(B) the State courts, for that reason, refused or would refuse to entertain the claim; or

"(C) such refusal would constitute an adequate and independent State law ground that would foreclose direct review of the State court judgment in the United States Supreme Court.

"(2) A district court shall consider a claim under this section if the prisoner shows that the failure to consider such a claim would result in a miscarriage of justice.

"§ 2265. Certificate of probable cause inapplicable

"The requirement of a certificate of probable cause in order to appeal from the district court to the court of appeals does not apply to habeas corpus cases subjects to this chapter except when a second or successive petition is filed.

"§ 2266. Counsel in capital cases; trail and post-conviction standards

"(a) A mechanism for the provision of counsel services to indigents sufficient to invoke the provisions of this chapter under section 2261(b) of this title shall provide for counsel to indigents charged with offenses for which capital punishment is sought and to indigents who have been sentenced to death and who seek appellate or collateral review in State court.

"(b)(1) In the case of an appointment made before trial, at least one attorney appointed under this chapter must have been admitted to practice in the court in which the prosecution is to be tried for not less than 5 years, and must have had not less than 3 years' experience in the trial of felony prosecutions in that court.

"(2) In the case of an appointment made after trail, at least one attorney appointed under this chapter must have been admitted to practice in the court of last resort of the State for not less than 5 years, and must have had not less than 3 years' experience in the handling of appeals in that State courts in felony cases.

"(3) Notwithstanding this subsection, a court, for good cause, may appoint another attorney whose background, knowledge, or experience would otherwise enable the attorney to properly represent the defendant, with due consideration of the seriousness of the possible penalty and the unique and complex nature of the litigation.

"(c) Upon a finding in ex parte proceedings that investigative, expert or other services are reasonably necessary for the representation of the defendant, whether in connection with issues relating to guilt or issues relating to sentence, the court shall authorize the defendant's attorney to obtain such services on behalf of the defendant and shall order the payment of fees and expenses therefor, under subsection (d). Upon finding that timely procurement of such services could not practicably await prior authorization, the court may authorize the provision of and payment of such services nunc pro tunc.

"(d) Notwithstanding the rates and maximum limits generally applicable to criminal cases and any other provision of law to the countrary, the court shall fix the compensation to be paid to an attorney appointed under this subsection and the fees and expenses to be paid for investigative, expert, and other reasonably necessary services authorized under subsection (c), at such rates or amounts as the court determines to be reasonably necessary to carry out the requirements of this subsection. A State court's determination of reasonable compensation, fees, and expenses shall not be reviewable in proceedings under this chapter or under section 2254 of this title, and any alleged insufficiency in compensation, fees, or expenses shall not be grounds for granting a writ of habeas corpus under this chapter or under section 2254 of this title, unless the court finds that the compensation, fees, and expenses awarded were so insufficient as to result in a denial of due process.

"§ 2267. Law controlling in Federal habeas corpus proceedings; retroactivity

"In cases subject to this chapter, all claims shall be governed by the law as it was when the petitioner's sentence became final, supplemented by an interim change in the law, if the court determines, in light of the purpose to be served by the change, the extent of reliance on previous law by law enforcement authorities, and the effect on the administration of justice, that it would be just to give the prisoner the benefit of the interim change in the law.

"§ 2268. Habeas corpus time requirements

"(a) A Federal district court shall determine any petition for a writ of habeas corpus brought under this chapter within 110 days of filing.

"(b) The court of appeals shall hear and determine any appeal of the granting, denial, or partial denial of a petition for a writ of habeas corpus brought under this chapter within 30 days after the appeal is submitted.

"(c) The Administrative Office of United States Courts shall report annually to Congress on the compliance by the courts with the time limits established in this section.".

(b) AMENDMENT TO TABLE OF CHAPTERS.—The table chapters for part IV of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item for chapter 153 the following:

"154. Special habeas corpus procedures in capital cases 2261".

(c) AMENDMENT TO SECTION 2254 OF TITLE 28.—Section 2254(c) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) striking "An applicant" and inserting "(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), an applicant"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) An applicant in a capital case shall be deemed to have exhausted the remedies available in the courts of the State when he has exhausted any right to direct appeal in the State.".

EXPANSION OF SUPPORT FOR EAST EUROPEAN DEMOCRACY PROGRAM

HELMS (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 1623

(Ordered referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.)

Mr. HELMS (for himself, Mr. BURNS, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. COATS, Mr. LOTT, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MACK, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, and Mr. KASTEN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 2040) to expand the size and scope of the Support for East European Democracy [SEED] Program, as follows:

Strike all of section 2(b)(2), all of section 701 and in section (3), strike all from "to include extending" through "market-based economy", and all from "In addition" through "SEED Program activities.".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am submitting an amendment to S. 2040, legislation proposed by the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. PELL, and others, to expand U.S. assistance to Eastern Europe. This amendment would delete those provisions of S. 2040 which would authorize using the money of the American taxpayer to aid the Soviet Union. I am pleased to have as cosponsors of this amendment Senators BURNS, D'AMATO, PRESSLER, COATS, LOTT, SYMMS, LUGAR, MACK, BOSCHWITZ, and KASTEN.

Mr. President, S. 2040, or as it is commonly known, SEED II, was introduced on January 30, 1990. It would expand Public Law 101-179, enacted last year to provide aid to Poland and Hungary. The bill may be marked up in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in the near future. We are filing this amendment as a first step toward preventing the enactment of those provisions of S. 2040 authorizing aid to the Soviet Union.

It is hard to believe that the Senate is faced with a serious proposal to authorize using the American taxpayers' money to aid the Soviet Union at this time. The Soviet Union has not gone through the same structural changes as her Eastern European neighbors and still spends a staggering amount of money on its military, including funding of the modernization of nuclear weapons. Any United States assistance provided to the Soviet Union, at best, will go down a rat hole.

The Central Intelligence Agency and Defense Intelligence Agency recently confirmed the dismal nature of the Soviet economy. In testimony before the Joint Economic Committee on April 20, 1990, the CIA noted that Soviet industrial production in 1989 registered its worst performance since World War II. It reported that despite an increase in GNP of 1.5 percent, the gap between production and demand widened greatly. The combination of inflation and shortages of everyday goods made life miserable for the general Soviet populace, with 43 million people, or 15 percent of the population, living below the Soviet's own poverty line. By the end of last year, only 50 of 1,200 standard consumer items were readily available in state stores.

Mr. President, alarming as these figures may be, the Soviets themselves believe the situation is even worse. Soviet economists visiting the United States have been quoted as saying that meat and grain production is only half as high as the CIA believes. They say industrial production dropped 5 percent in the first months of 1990. They even say that Soviet living standards are less than one-third that of Americans.

Despite this obvious indictment of the Communist system, the Soviet Government has seen fit to delay promised economic reforms, indefinitely.

The Soviet Union has also had a hard time paying its debts. On May 2, several major Japanese companies, including C. Itoh and Mitsubishi, filed claims with the Japanese Government, in effect saying that Soviet companies are over 2 months behind in paying off their hard currency debts. According to the Wall Sreet Journal, firms in Europe and right here in the United States are having similar problems. The Journal also noted that some analysts believe that the Soviets' unpaid bills total $500 million.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the April 21 Washington Post article reporting on the hearing at which the CIA gave its report along with an article from the April 24, 1990, Philadelphia Inquirer on the comments made by the Soviet economists in response to this report and an article from the May 3 Wall Street Journal on the Japanese loans be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Despite the obvious decrepit shape of the Soviet Government, the Kremline steadfastly refuses to institute the kind of free-enterprise reforms necessary for any economy to survive and grow.

At the same time, the Soviet economy is in a state of collapse, the Soviets continue to spend significant amounts of money on military spending. The CIA believes the Soviets spend between 15 to 17 percent of their GNP on their military. The group of Soviet economists who visited the United States estimates that this amount is closer to 25 percent. In contrast, the United States spends only 5.9 percent of our GNP on defense.

Beyond this, the Soviets continue to act against American interests abroad. On Monday, March 19, the Washington Post reported that the Soviets were helping the Communist Angolans launch a final offensive, which again included the use of poison gas, against the UNITA freedom fighters. The Soviets no doubt helped finance this offensive as $1 billion has been given to the Communists in Angola over the past 2 years.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Washington Post article, be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

Over the past few years, Mr. President, the Soviets have deployed a total of 15 new nuclear missile systems. The United States has deployed but one.

Mr. Gorbachev, through the world's largest airlift, has sent between $200 and $300 million worth of arms each month into Afghanistan in order to prop up the unpopular Communist dictatorship there and continue that country's civil war.

It was Mr. Gorbachev, Mr. President, who sent Mig-29's to Cuba, in violation of the Kennedy-Khrushchev agreement, and it was Mr. Gorbachev who sent SAM II missiles to Nicaragua.

Do Senators truly want to send United States tax dollars to the Soviet Union when they are conducting these kinds of activities?

Apparently this is a possibility to which the supporters of S. 2040 want to open the door. Section 3 of the bill authorizes the President to include the Soviet Union "within the scope of SEED Program activities." Section 4(b) of the bill outlines the kinds of assistance for which the Soviet Union would be eligible. Specifically, the Soviets would have access to the International Monetary Fund and World Bank, debt rescheduling, agricultural assistance, technical training, expansion of the peace corps, trade benefits under the General System of Trade Preferences, programs of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, investment treaties, special tax treatment for below market loans, and encouragement for private investment and voluntary assistance.

Mr. President, the Bush administration shares my concerns on this issue. The administration has advised Congress that it opposes provisions in the bill authorizing aid to the Soviet Union, stating that:

First, the Soviets have not "begun to approach the progress of the Eastern European countries in initiating the process of political and economic reform."

Second, the Soviets continue to "devote substantial resources to international activities directly counter to U.S. interests."

Third, the Soviets have not requested aid.

Fourth, because of our limited resources, aiding a country as large as the Soviet Union would significantly reduce the amount of aid available for Eastern Europe.

Mr. President, I believe that the administration has hit the nail right on the head. I fail to see why Senators would want to authorize sending American tax dollars to aid the Soviets at this time.

In an era when the former satellites in the Soviet bloc are throwing off the yoke of their oppressors and moving toward more democratic systems, the Soviet Union itself remains mired in much of the same economic and military principles as they did before Mr. Gorbachev came into power.

While countries such as Poland and Hungary attempt to engage in free market reforms, the Soviet Union has still has not shaken off the Stalinist economic system.

While countries in Eastern Europe are experimenting with broad multiparty democracies, the Soviet are consolidating power in the hands of one man, President Mikhail Gorbachev.

While the countries of Eastern Europe are experimenting with opening up to the foreign press and allowing as opposition press, the Soviet secret police still stalk some Western reporters and muzzle opposition groups that do not serve their interests, despite the much trumpeted glasnost.

Mr. President, S. 2040 calls for providing aid to help develop democratic institutions and formulate market economies. I agree that the Soviet Union should move toward these goals. I also believe that the countries of Eastern Europe should continue to do likewise. But if we open this program to the Soviets, significant funds will be taken away from the countries of Eastern Europe that this bill is designed to help.

If the sponsors of this legislation really want to aid to the Soviet Union by authorizing Soviet participation in such programs, I invite them to introduce new legislation so that issue can be debated on its merits at a later date.

Last, Mr. President, when the Senate is being asked to help the new democracies, I fail to see the logic in making available to the Soviet Union a United States aid program when they have not even requested our help. I believe in Christian charity as much as the next guy but frankly, Mr. President, this part of the bill is rediculous.

Mr. President, I feel that there are very good reasons not to aid the Soviet Union at this time. My cosponsors and President Bush know this, too. We feel that if we are going to send aid to Mr. Gorbachev, this is neither the right time nor the right vehicle. I urge all Senators to support my amendment.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOVIET ECONOMY "UNSTABLE," U.S. INTELLIGENCE SAYS

(By Don Oberdorfer)

The Soviet economy is in "an unstable state" and could be pushed "over the edge into sharp deterioration" by further strikes, ethnic or regional unrest or other shocks, U.S. intelligence agencies reported yesterday.

Soviet military spending fell much faster last year than previously believed—by 4 or 5 percent, the agencies said.

The Central Intelligence Agency and Defense Intelligence Agency presented their bleakest-ever estimates on the Soviet economy to the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, which released them yesterday.

"Soviet economic performance was abysmal in 1989—the worst since [President Mikhail] Gorbachev took over," said CIA Deputy Director John L. Helgerson. For the foreseeable future, Helgerson said in presenting the agency's annual report on the Soviet economy, "the prospect of even a modest economic recovery appears to be remote at best."

Perhaps the most notable departure from past versions of this annual report was the judgment that "there is a reasonable chance that the economy could deteriorate sharply" into what some Western economists have called a virtual "free fall," bringing a severe and immediate crisis.

According to the report, "a single major event or series of smaller linked events could push the economy over the edge into sharp deterioration" of perhaps 20 percent in output over a year or two, leading to economic chaos. Possible catalysts for such a crisis, the report said, could be strikes, ethnic or regional unrest, consumer panic or sudden privatization or decontrol of prices.

The analysis, titled "The Soviet Economy Stumbles Badly in 1989," appears to have been the basis of CIA Director William H. Webster's statement April 12 that the Soviet Union has entered a "deep and prolonged" crisis. It is also consistent with Secretary of State James A. Baker III's gloomy—though notably less alarmist—report on the Soviet economy to the House Ways and Means Committee Wednesday.

The major bright spot, from a U.S. standpoint, is the first unequivocal CIA-DIA statement that the Soviet Union's military strength is declining significantly. Last year, the report said, Soviet weapons spending declined 6 to 7 percent, overall military spending declined 4 to 5 percent and Soviet military forces declined by 200,000 troops.

As recently as last November, the CIA had estimated that overall Soviet military spending had declined by only 1.5 percent in 1989. This early indication of Soviet cutbacks came to light shortly after President Bush, Vice President Quayle and Defense Secretary Richard B. Cheney had made public statements emphasizing that Moscow's defense spending had increased in each of the previous four years.

Sen. Jeff Bingaman (D-N.M.), chairman of the subcommittee that received the new report, said it painted a "very different picture" from that contained in the Pentagon's annual "Soviet Military Power" study. He added, "If these trends continue, we may actually see a significant slowing of the arms race."

In a special summary of the military situation, DIA acting Deputy Director Dennis M. Nagy said the Soviets are "well on their way" to making good on the unilateral troop and weapons cuts announced by Gorbachev in his dramatic address at the United Nations on Dec. 7, 1988. The DIA estimates that the Soviets have completed at least half of the tank reductions and about three-quarters of the artillery and combat aircraft reductions Gorbachev promised in Europe, Nagy said.

Nagy also reported the Soviet Union is following through on cutbacks in Soviet forces along the Sino-Soviet border and in Mongolia, where the DIA estimates that all Soviet ground forces will be gone by the end of next year. Moscow will continue to be able to defend its Asian borders, but will be "less capable of offensive operations" than in the past, Nagy said.

In a two-hour conversation with a delegation of visiting U.S. senators in the Kremlin April 12, Gorbachev called the economy his "most important task" and said the present time is "the most trying moment" for his perestroika reform program because the old centeralized economic system is being abandoned but a new economic system is not yet in place.

Recent reports from Moscow have disclosed that the government there has prepared sweeping, potentially disruptive economic reforms, but has so far postponed announcing or implementing them.

The CIA-DIA report, noting that no centrally planned economy has yet made a successful or complete transition to a market economy, expressed caution about the prospects for decisive action on economic reform. Even if a major reform package is advanced and made law in the Soviet Union, it will have little positive impact in the short run and might have a temporarily "destablizing effect" on economic growth, the report said.

The stagnation of the Soviet economy has been documented in a nearly consistent string of previous CIA-DIA reports, except for the report of 1986, Gorbachev's first full year, when a bumper harvest boosted economic activity. But the current report placed greater stress than in the past on the severe shortages and price rises facing consumers, developments blamed on such factors as the production and transportation breakdowns and an inflationary budget deficit that has been sharply rising.

"The combination of inflation and shortages made daily life miserable for all but the most privileged segments of Soviet society," according to the report. About 43 million people, or 15 percent of the population, are officially described by the Soviets as living in poverty, and even for the rest, shortages and economic frustration are pervasive.

The report said only 200 of 1,200 standard consumer items were readily available in Soviet state stores last August. By year's end, only 50 such items were available. The agencies, said the "quality of life" in the Soviet Union "is well below that in Western industrialized countries and closer to that in such less developed nations as Mexico and Portugal."

As things stand, the report forecasts, the Soviet economy at best will continue to stagnate in 1990.

U.S.S.R. Economy Worse Than CIA Thinks, Soviets Say

(By Robert A. Rankin)

Washington.—The Soviet Union's economy is much weaker than the CIA thinks—even though the CIA thinks that it is feeble to the point of "near-crisis," top Soviet economists said yesterday.

The CIA reckons that the Soviet economy is about half the size of the United States', but it really is only 14 percent to 28 percent as large, the Soviet experts said.

Soviet living standards are not close to being the one-third of U.S. levels that CIA data indicate, they said.

And military expenses swallow about 25 percent of Soviet production, they added, a much bigger bite than the CIA's estimate of 15 percent to 17 percent.

In a news conference here resembling a game of "Can you top this?" the Soviet experts detailed just how broken down their economy is:

Soviet industrial production sank by at least 5 percent in the first three months of 1990.

Meat production is only half as high as official Soviet statistics indicate, and grain output is similarly overstated.

Most consumer goods, once running in short supply, now are simply nonexistent.

"You can buy bread, some milk products, not all. Sugar you can buy only if you have ration tickets. No refrigerators. No TV sets. No furniture. No vacuum cleaners, and so on. No shoes," summarized Oleg Bogomolov, director of the Institute of Economics of the World Socialist System, who is also a member of the Soviet parliament and the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences.

"I know very well that our economy is experiencing a very deep crisis, and the situation is deteriorating," Bogomolov said.

On that basis point, at least, the CIA and Soviets agree.

On Friday, the CIA told Congress' Joint Economic Committee that the Soviet economy was in "an unstable state' and that it could be pushed by events into "chaos," with output plummeting 20 percent.

Widespread strikes, ethnic conflict and severe weather could trigger such a free fall in production, the Soviet experts generally agreed yesterday. But they said they worried less about such dramatic plunges than about the continuing breakdown of their system.

Consumer markets and state distribution systems "are collapsing," and the state of Soviet agriculture "is as grave as it used to be," said Vladimir Tikhonov, a leading Soviet academician, member of parliament and chairman of the Joint Union of Cooperatives of the U.S.S.R.

"In other words, the crisis is developing, and for a couple of years in the future I don't see anything positive in that respect," Tikhonov said.

CIA and Soviet experts compared notes at an unprecedented four-day closed-door retreat in nearby Warrenton, Va., over the weekend. A panel of the Soviet experts met media reporters yesterday at a conference hosted by the American Enterprise Institute.

The Soviets criticized government monopoly power as the root of the Soviet Union's economic evils, which Tikhonov said dated from 1922, "when government began to centralize control over the economy."

"The motivation to labor has been completely lost." said Viktor Belkin of the Soviet Union's Academy of Sciences.

"The people will not work for empty money. The state pretends to pay people wages, and the people pretend to work," Bogolov said. Instead, he added, workers "need real material incentives. This is the goal of our economic reforms."

CIA estimates of the Soviet economy have long been badly skewed, the Soviet experts said. CIA miscalculations are caused mainly by the inherent difficulty of comparing the nonmarket Soviet economy—with its false official statistics—with the United States' price-directed market system, the Soviet experts said.

Another reason may be that CIA estimates have been "adjusted for political purposes" to make the Soviet Union appear more formidable, Belkin said.

Japanese Traders Informing Tokyo Soviet Bills Unpaid

(By Yumiko Ono)

Tokyo.—Concerned about Soviet Importers not paying their bills, Japanese companies are making the first moves to claim export insurance on trade with the Soviet Union.

Major trading houses, including C. Itoh & Co., Mitsui & Co., Mitsubishi Corp. and Nissho Iwai Co., confirmed they have submitted notices informing the government that some Soviet trading partners are delaying payment on import contracts.

As previously reported, many Soviet organizations are having difficulties honoring trade commitments in a timely fashion. Dozens of U.S. and European companies have complained in recent months about nonpayment from Soviet customers, and some companies have halted deliveries pending payment. Some analysts estimate the unpaid bills total as much as $500 million.

SWEEPING DECENTRALIZATION

The recent delay in payments arises in part from a sweeping decentralization of Soviet foreign trade this past year, Japanese company officials said. Numerous Soviet trading organizations have sprouted since the reform, but some lack foreign currency to pay their bills on time. And Soviet banks are reluctant to bail them out, as they have in the past. Trading house officials say Soviet steel-trading organizations, in particular, have been asking Japan to extend payment deadlines.

U.S. companies, which also have reported difficulty getting paid by the Soviets, aren't covered by official export insurance as many of their Japanese and European counterparts are for Soviet trade. So far, the payment delays don't seem to have brought significant European claims to insurers. A spokesman for Britain's Export Credit Guaranty Department said "things haven't reached the claims stage yet."

An official for C. Itoh, commenting on the Soviet payment problem, said. "Trade isn't going smoothly." The company's trade with the Soviet Union last year reached about $300 million. "The [contract] settlements are being extended." The company recently informed the government about a delay in payment for chemical products, the official said.

Japan's giant trading houses said they don't intend to cut exports immediately, even though the delayed payments may total as much as $200 million. There are no reports so far of Japanese companies halting deliveries, but trading company officials said exports could be affected if delays in Soviet payments continue.

Notification of payments problems routinely goes to the Ministry of International Trade and Industry if insured export contracts aren't settled for more than two months. The notice is a preliminary step in claiming insurance. The next step would be for MITI to begin investigating to determine if payment is required.

MITI's international trade-insurance division wouldn't confirm receiving notifications. An official also denied a Japanese press report that the ministry itself urged the companies to submit the notifications. But he said that if notifications involving a specific area increase, the government will investigate.

SMALL TRADE

Japanese-Soviet trade isn't large, edging up only 3.2% in 1989 from a year earlier, to $6.09 billion. Japan's exports to the Soviet Union were $3.08 billion in 1989, down slightly from $3.13 billion in 1988.

Analysts said that Japanese trading houses are keeping a low profile on the problem, in part because they don't want to damage trade prospects. "They're being cautions," said Kazuko Motomura, an official with the Institute for Soviet and East European Economic Studies, a research organization set up by traders who do business with Eastern Europe. "But they're also thinking about the promising possibilities of the market in the future."

Officials with Marubeni Co. and Sumitomo Corp., for example, acknowledged that there was a general move toward submitting notices but declined to say if further actions are under way.

But officials at other houses stressed that the notifications were purely routine. "We think that the Soviet Union will definitely make the payment," said Tetsuya Onishi, and official in Nissho Iwai's public relations division. Though Nissho Iwai received payments for the bulk of its annual $400 million exports, it filed a notice for steel and chemical products, Mr. Onishi said. The company still intends to participate in a consortium that is involved in a 38 billion yen ($239.4 million) project to build three compressor plants in the Soviet Union, he added.

ANGOLAN WAR IN SHOWDOWN

(By David B. Ottaway)

JAMBA, ANGOLA.—The Angolan civil war appears to be reaching a climax as U.S.-backed rebels led by Jonas Savimbi and the Soviet-armed Angolan army are locked in their biggest battlefield encounter, with heavy casualties on both sides.

After nearly three months of fighting, however, an offensive launched by the Angolan army Dec. 21 to take Mavinga, the gateway town to Savimbi's headquarters here, has reached what appears to be a stalemate just to the north.

The latest offensive in sub-Saharan Africa's only sustained conventional war, however, leaves the government in a stronger military position than before it attacked, and comes as U.S. and Soviet officials are preparing to discuss a possible joint intervention to settle the continent's last Cold War conflict.

Both superpowers have heavy and long-term stakes in Angola, with massive amounts of Soviet-supplied equipment used by government forces and with the Bush administration providing $50 million in covert military aid to Savimbi and an emergency airlift of supplies to help thwart the current offensive.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze are planning a two-day meeting in Windhoek, the Namibian capital, beginning Tuesday, the eve of that country's independence from South Africa.

After its deepest penetration into Savimbi's heartland in southeastern Angola in the 15-year-old war, the Angolan army now finds its most forward units outside Mavinga in a tenuous position. The army's logistical lines are stretched 85 miles from Cuito Cuanavale to the west, and are exposed to constant harassment by Savimbi's guerrillas. Its soldiers are facing shortages of oil, gasoline, food and water, according to Savimbi and his military intelligence chief, Gen. Peregrino Isidoro Wambu Chindondo.

Savimbi said the two sides are now engaged in a "war of logistics." He claimed to be in a better position to prevail by bringing "the mostest and fastest" resupplies to the front, because the government forces "are in my land."

"No one is ambushing my convoys, no one is harassing my roads," Savimbi said.

The latest offensive, which even the government in Luanda has described as the last of the war, has caused heavy casualties on both sides. As of March 12, the Angolan army had lost 724 men and Savimbi's forces 186, with 558 wounded, according to his side's count.

Making use of hundreds of Soviet-provided, fast-moving armored personnel carriers, as well as Soviet tactics, the Angolan army has mounted its most impressive offensive to date, managing to cross the Lomba River and almost seizing Mavinga for the first time in the war. Pentagon officials estimate that the Soviet Union has provided $1.2 billion to $1.5 billion in materiel for this offensive over the past two years.

But the United States has come to the rescue of Savimbi's forces by mounting an emergency airlift of oil, gasoline, and antitank missiles, allowing Savimbi to stall the Angolan offensive just shy of its main objective of capturing Mavinga.

The American airlift has made use of the Kamina air base in southern Zaire and involved scores of night flights to dirt-strip airports around here and Licua, 125 miles northwest, according to U.S. and Angolan sources.

The Bush administration had already earmarked at least $50 million for its covert military program to aid Savimbi's National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) this fiscal year. It is unclear whether the United States has increased that amount or accelerated the shipment of weapons already in the pipeline, including Stinger antiaircraft missiles and TWO and LAW antitank missiles.

"Without the support we got from the United States, I think this time we would be in really serious trouble," said Savimbi in a late-night interview earlier this week at his underground bunker headquarters here. "They [the Americans] have been very, very helpful."

But he said it had been "very difficult" to convince the U.S. intelligence community that the Angolan government was seeking more than small-scale tactical advantages at the onset of the current fighting. The U.S. response was delayed "until they saw it was really a big offensive," Savimbi said.

Gen. Wambu said UNITA had committed 15,000 regular forces and guerrilla commandos to halt what he estimated to be 12,000 regular Angolan army troops using 400 tanks and armored personnel carriers to pierce UNITA's defenses.

Both Savimbi and Wambu said it was by far the Angolan army's biggest offensive and involved Soviet advisers and transport planes but—for the first time—no Cuban assistance.

Savimbi said the Soviets proved to be "the radicals" in favor of the offensive, while the Cubans were "the moderates." During secret meetings in Paris, Geneva and Vienna, Savimbi said, the Cubans told him that "they were against this offensive."

Cuba has become preoccupied with the logistics of withdrawing its 50,000 troops from Angola under terms of a U.S.-brokered agreement among South Africa, Angola and Cuba, signed in December 1988, which also set in motion the independence process for Namibia.

Cuba has notified South Africa that the mandated withdrawal of two-thirds of the Cuban force by April 1 is running a few hundred troops behind schedule. This was caused by a month-long halt to the pullout, ordered by Havana, after four Cuban soldiers were killed in a UNITA attack.

The Bush administration also believes the Soviets are deeply involved in the offensive and has complained repeatedly to Moscow about it, according to U.S. officials.

Savimbi appeared relaxed and relatively confident of success as he recounted an attack that day on a 47-vehicle convoy carrying food, fuel, water and ammunition to the Angolan army's most forward position, which he said was about five miles northwest of Mavinga.

"It is my feeling the offensive is going against them. I don't say all the resources of the [Angolan army] are depleted, not yet. They have more resources. But they have committed their best troops and commanders from the beginning. . . . They have committed the best they have. If the results are what they are, I don't see where they are going to get more troops to better the situation," he said.

Beginning in 1988, the Soviets have supplied hundreds of armored personnel carriers to the Angolan army and taught it how to use them in large numbers for fast strikes over long distances, Gen. Wambu said.

The Soviets also have given the Angolan army a new artillery piece, which Savimbi described as the M-46. He said it has a range of almost 25 miles. Savimbi said that before the current fighting his forces had captured a Soviet D-30, which has only a 10-mile maximum range.

The Angolan army has moved for the first time in what Savimbi described as "tactical groups" of 600 troops, which he said were "the most aggressive forces to break our resistance."

The Soviets also have taught the Angolans how to defend a resupply convoy in a manner that makes it difficult to knock out the main vehicles, Savimbi and Wambus said.

The Angolan forces have used Soviet-built MiG-23 and Su-25 attack aircraft to bombard UNITA positions. However, the warplanes have had to fly at such a high altitude to avoid the three-mile range of UNITA's U.S.-provided Stinger missiles that they are "not effective" in the fighting, Savimbi said.

He said UNITA intelligence estimated that only high-altitude missiles could shoot down the high-flying Angolan fighters, but these weapons were so sophisticated that he decided not to ask the United States to provide them.

Savimbi seemed to dismiss the threat of the Angolan warplanes, except to his headquarters in Jamba, which was bombed for the second time this month while three reporters visited last week.

UNITA officers accompanying the reporters handed them wet towels, for use in the event the warplanes dropped bombs that, they said, spewed canisters filled with nerve gas. They said the poison gas was responsible for paralyzing a number of UNITA soldiers and civilians.

Thirty-six hours after the bombing, the reporters were taken by UNITA officers to a spot where one of these bombs allegedly had exploded. Scattered over a 500-yard area and sometimes dug into the earth were a number of canisters that were the shape, and perhaps twice the length, of a soup can.

A white substance was visible around several of the canisters, which emitted a strong, pungent smell. However, it was impossible to determine whether the substance was toxic, as UNITA claims.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE 35TH ANNUAL DETAILED FINANCIAL REPORT OF SENATOR PAUL SIMON

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, it has been my practice in each of the 35 years I have spent in public life to volunteer a detailed accounting of my finances.

I ask that my financial report for 1988 be printed in the RECORD.

The financial report and related announcement follow:

ANNOUNCEMENT

For the 35th consecutive year that he has held public office, U.S. Senator Paul Simon, D-Ill., has released a detailed description of his income, assets and liabilities.

Simon has been making the voluntary annual statements longer than any other national officeholder, according to his office. Simon set his policy when he entered public service as a State representative in 1955 from the world of business. He followed the practice during 8 years in the Illinois House of Representatives, 6 years in the Illinois Senate, 4 years as lieutenant governor and 10 years in the U.S. House of Representatives. The listing predates disclosure requirements of State and Federal law and continues to exceed those requirements. Senate rules today require only the listing of income in broad brackets. His practice also has set the standard for officeholders in Illinois, where a generation has looked to Simon as a model of public income disclosure obligations. Simon also continues to exceed Senate requirements by listing detailed income for his wife, Jeanne.

The Illinois Senator lists 1989 income for himself and Jeanne Simon totaling $188,368.97. The figure includes his Senate salary, honoraria and reimbursements for travel and other expenses, and other items.

The Simons had assets of $374,170 and liabilities of $173,473 for a net worth of $200,697.

Income Statement of Paul and Jeanne Simon—1989

ALBUQUERQUE UNITED 76 FOOTBALL CLUB WINS STATE SOCCER CHAMPIONSHIP

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would like to recognize an outstanding youth soccer team from my hometown of Albuquerque which has just won the title of State champions in the under-14 age group at the New Mexico State Cup Soccer Tournament. The Albuquerque United 76 Football Club defeated eight opponents by a combined score of 47 to 3 to win this title. This team, coached by Dr. Larry Azevedo, now advances to the Western Regional Soccer Tournament in Bakersfield, CA, June 15-19, 1990. I want to wish them the very best in this prestigious tournament and to congratulate them for their fine victory last week.

The members of the team are: Keith Thompson, Matt Udell, Chester Goodson, Timothy Atler, Scott Coday, Matt Ellis, Steven Kraemer, Jerry Winton, Jeff Byers, Todd Trevino, Pancho Macias, Zack Cheney, Heath Driver, Jesse Harvey, and Matt McKinney.

The team's 1989-90 record was 30 wins, 10 losses and 2 ties, and included participation in tournaments in Houston, Phoenix, and Los Angeles.●

AMERICA'S VOLUNTEER ARMED FORCES

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, there exists a saying that "it is a dangerous job, but someone must do it." I can think of no better application of this aphorism than to the brave men and women who serve in America's volunteer Armed Forces.

It takes a tough person to serve in the military; one who is willing to make personal sacrifices so that others may enjoy democracy. As a volunteer force, no one has asked these Americans to serve their country—no one has asked them to labor and toil for freedom's sake. I would offer, Mr. President, that they do so because of their respect for liberty, justice, and independence.

During times of war, our Armed Forces personnel often find themselves within reach of the Grim Reaper's cold embrace. On fields of combat—be it land, air, or sea—they confront a hostile force so that other Americans won't have to. I can think of no sacrifice as noble or honorable than the defense of one's country.

Last week, two accidents occurred on Naval vessels that provide a reminder of the hazards of duty. I think I speak for all my colleagues in offering sincere condolences to the families of the sailors who perished aboard the U.S.S. Conyngham. Mr. President, my heart especially goes out to the family of GSE 3 Norbert Thomas Hanke, who died aboard LCAC 008 while on the Chesapeake Bay. I would like to say to the many family members that their loved ones are remembered for their selfless sacrifices, for their patriotism and dedication to America.

FORMER MEMBER OF CONGRESS ELDON RUDD ENDORSES CONGRESSIONAL TERM LIMITATION

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have been sharing letters with Senators from many former Members of Congress who support term limitation. In my opinion, the views of former Members are particularly noteworthy, because they are a unique group of people who have made laws and then lived under them. I think all current Members could benefit from the voices of experience.

I ask that a letter I have recently received from former Member Eldon Rudd be inserted in the RECORD immediately following my remarks. Mr. Rudd served in the House of Representatives from 1976 to 1987.

The letter follows:

LAW OFFICES, SHIMMEL, HILL,
BISHOP & GRUENDER, P.C.,
Phoenix, AZ, March 9, 1990.

Hon. GORDON J. HUMPHREY,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR GORDON: Thank you for your good letter of February 20 last explaining S.J. Res. 235 which proposes a constitutional amendment to limit tenure of Members of Congress. You also asked for my endorsement as a former sitting Member of Congress (1976-87). I do most positively support S.J. Res. 235.

May you be successful.

With very best wishes.

Sincerely,

ELDON RUDD.●

JAMES A. PATTERSON, 1990 ENTREPRENEUR OF THE YEAR

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate James Patterson for being named the "1990 Entrepreneur of the Year" by the Entrepreneur Society. The award was presented at the third annual awards ceremony in Louisville, KY, on April 3, 1990.

Jim Patterson truly deserves this prestigious recognition. He is well-known and respected throughout Kentucky and the United States as the founder of several businesses including Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppes, Rally's, Inc., and AmeriCall Business Long Distance, that affect millions of Americans each day. Jim Patterson does not spend all of his time overseeing his businesses, but continues to make numerous civic contributions to the Louisville area. He serves as the director of the Kentucky Derby Museum and the Kentucky Center for the Arts. Additionally, he serves as a trustee for the University of Louisville. Jane S. Blake, chairman of the awards program was quoted as stating that:

> Jim Patterson thinks of the community as well as himself, taking time to help those who seek his help. I think that sets him apart from the usual entrepreneur.

I could not agree more. Jim Patterson is a dedicated entrepreneur who takes the time to also make important civic contributions to the Louisville area. I congratulate him for being chosen the 1990 Entrepreneur of the Year.

I hope that all of my colleagues in this body will take note of Jim Patterson's outstanding achievements.●

YOU'LL LIKE BURLINGTON, CO

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I would like to bring to your attention the progressive town of Burlington. Located 165 miles east of Denver, with its nearly 4,163-foot elevation in the heart of deep-well irrigation, Burlington is the county seat of Kit Carson County, and serves as an active trade center for many of the region's agricultural, medical, educational, and recreational activities. One of Burlington's greatest assets is its unsurpassed quality of life. Burlington is a land of diverse cultural, civic, and recreational offerings. Health, civic, and religious organizations abound throughout Burlington, with historic Old Town and Kit Carson Carousel, one of 13 national landmarks in Colorado, serving as fantastic diversions. The Kit Carson County Carousel is a beautifully restored and fully operating carousel located at the Burlington County Fairgrounds, and the carousel's history is as interesting as the 46 hand-carved wooden animals are beautiful. Another "must see" is the Old Town, an outdoor museum complex which was established to enable Burlington to preserve an extensive and priceless bit of history as well as develop the town's economy.

As the season of family vacations approaches, I urge those who are traveling out West to stop in Burlington, CO, for an assuredly warm reception from the residents.●

THE TRIUMPH AND TRAGEDY OF POPE GORDON

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, John F. Kennedy in his book "Profiles in Courage" wrote "A man does what he must—in spite of personal consequences, in spite of obstacles and dangers and pressures—and that is the basis of all human morality. * * *" Mr. President, this past Tuesday, Lt. Algernon Pope Gordon, Jr., of Montgomery, AL, reached for and found his own personal courage and in doing so forfeited his own life to save others.

It was a "mixture of triumph and tragedy" that claimed Pope Gordon's life. Early reports tell us that as fire raged aboard the U.S.S. Conyngham in the early morning hours, Pope went to the ship's sleeping quarters to wake up fellow crew members. He never emerged from those quarters, but his shipmates did.

Pope, the son of Algernon Pope Gordon, Sr., and his wife Jane, was just 34 years old when he died. But in those few years, he left his mark on this world—in his life, and in his death. In the news accounts that reported the tragedy aboard the Conyngham, many of Pope's shipmates and friends have been quoted. A common theme runs through these thoughts about their friend. It seems Pope was one of those rare individuals who was able to go through life always smiling. He combined the ability to get things done with the ability to make others laugh—a quality that was recognized early on when his graduating class from Jefferson Davis High School voted him "wittiest" in 1974.

To Pope's parents, Pope, Sr., and Jane, and to his wife, Shelly and their three children, Collins, Marijane, and Sara, I offer my sincerest condolences. Pope's death was a tragedy for his family, for the Navy, for Alabama and for this country. But in this tragedy there is also triumph—for Pope's courage and spirit will live on in all who shared his life.

Mr. President, allow me to return to a quote from "Profiles in Courage," "The stories of past courage can define that ingredient—they can teach, they can offer hope, they can provide inspiration. But they cannot supply courage itself. For this each man must look into his own soul." Mr. President, last Tuesday Pope Gordon did not want for courage, he looked into his own soul and found it in abundance.●

SENATOR PELL SEEKS A NEW ROLE FOR THE SUBMARINE INDUSTRY

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the economics of the submarine industry are of critical importance to southeastern New England. The Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics, builder of Los Angeles class, Trident and Seawolf submarines, employs some 24,000 people at its facilities in Groton, CT, and Quonset Point, RI. Current proposals to curb or space out the production of submarines could have a serious impact on the area, and at worst could result in hardship for many.

With this in mind, I was pleased to join in cosponsoring recently the Defense Diversification and Adjustment Act, S. 2097, which has been introduced by our colleague from Rhode Island, Senator CLAIBORNE PELL. Senator PELL has been for many years an advocate of planning alternative uses for our major defense industries, and now that the cold war is apparently easing and defense production declining, his ideas have come into their own time.

One of the provisions of Senator PELL's bill which he acknowledges is controversial would require contractors to set aside a modest share of their defense revenues to provide for internal planning for alternative use of their facilities in the event of defense cutbacks. This concept has placed him at odds with the management of General Dynamics, who argue that their company is too deeply committed to defense contracting to permit it to diversify into commercial production.

The significance of this debate has not been lost on those who would be most affected. In Westerly, RI, a community on the Connecticut line with a big stake in the future of Electric Boat, the daily newspaper, the Westerly Sun, ran an editorial on May 7 entitled "Selling Subs—A New Market Is Needed," in which it suggested that "PELL seems to have the stronger argument and the more acceptable solution." This article raises interesting points in this timely debate and I recommend it to all who share our concern for the U.S. submarine industry. I ask that the text of the article be reprinted in the RECORD at this point.

[From the Westerly (RI) Sun, May 7, 1990]

SELLING SUBS: A NEW MARKET IS NEEDED

The likelihood of selling submarines to civilian buyers is quite remote and that, in all likelihood, is going to create serious problems for Southern Rhode Island and Eastern Connecticut.

Last week, Stanley C. Pace, chairman of General Dynamics Corporation which builds submarines, and Sen. Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island aired their views on the future of defense industries in a time when defense dollar are becoming fewer.

Conceding that defense industry layoffs are inevitable, Pace argues that government should get involved in converting workers to handle other jobs rather than convert arms builders to the production of other goods.

Pell, on the other hand, contends that defense contractors should be required by law to consider alternatives to the manufacture of death-dealing ships, planes and tanks.

Looking at the big picture, Pell seems to have the stronger argument and more acceptable solution. For the builders of aircraft there is a huge market to be serviced by manufacturers, this attested to by Boeing's significant backlog of orders. The builders of tanks and other ground-traversing vehicles might look to automobiles, trucks and trains as alternatives to the destructive devices they now produce. Some 70 percent of this planet's surface is water guaranteeing there will always be a need for ships.

But submarines? Who, other than a government bent on sinking its neighbor or fearful of being sunk by a neighbor, wants one?

As neighbors learn to get along with each other, the demand for missile-toting, torpedo-firing submarines dives deeply.

Since John Holland's submersible "Turtle" went down and marvelously came back up early this century, the technology allowing sub-surface ships to dive deeper, stay at sea longer, and go faster and farther, has grown immensely.

To say we should no longer build submarines would be a mistake. To say we must have scores of submarines for national defense is also a mistake.

The technology we have should be taken advantage of, be built upon, so these vessels can go still deeper, faster and farther. There is a frontier beneath the oceans that cries for exploration which can only be accomplished with new and better submarines. As we seek new and better ways to explore space, we should seek new and better ways to explore the oceans' depths.

The submarine needs a new identity. Today a submarine is an instrument of war, nothing else. In its early days, the rocket was viewed as an instrument of war. Today, in the United States, the rocket, military versions notwithstanding, is a vehicle for exploration operated under the auspices of civilians who are the National Space and Aeronautics Administration, Tomorrow, perhaps, the submarine, on missions planned by and for civilians, could study that surface of this planet which lies beneath fathoms of water, a surface and sub-surface which might produce unimaginable benefits in terms of knowledge and resources.

We have invested too much in submarine technology to say we will build no more. We have invested too much into submarine technology not to take full advantage of that investment. Let the research and development that have brought us this far continue, and let that research and development produce submarines that will enrich lives, not snuff them out.

Perhaps the Honorable Mr. Pace is being a bit shortsighted. Perhaps there is a civilian market for submarines. Perhaps Mr. Pell might consider taking steps to establish a civilian agency within the government, similar to NASA, which might seek, not the outer limits of space, but the inner limits of the oceans.●

TED NELSON WRITES FROM TIANANMEN SQUARE

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, last May Ted Nelson, of Jackson, TN, was in Tiananmen Square on the night students erected the Goddess of Liberty statue, one very similar to our own Statue of Liberty. As Americans, we seem to take for granted the struggles our forefathers and past leaders endured for the sake of freedom and equality. I hope that while my colleagues read the following letter, they will be reminded, as I was, or our Nation's past accomplishments and continue to progress, overcoming restrictive forces, for the sake of liberty. I ask that the following letter be entered into the RECORD:

The letter follows:

While we were standing at the base of the "Goddess of Democracy" in Tiananmen Square Beijing, China 12:00 midnight, May 30, 1989, over the speaker system came the song "A Mighty Fortress is Our God". A song that had special meaning to the Chinese Students that erected the Statue. As you read the words you may feel the commitment the Students had for change and the potiential crack down ahead. I Have never felt such powerful feelings as the image of the "Goddess of Democracy" and the words of the great song merged. Note that our Statue of Liberty holds the freedom torch with one strong arm, the Goddess of Democracy creators chose two arms symbolizing the struggle to support the light of change.

A mighty fortress is our God, A bulwark never failing; Our helper He, amid the flood of mortal ills prevailing: For still our ancient foe Doth seek to work us woe; His craft and pow'r are great, And, armed with cruel hate, On earth is not his equal. Did we in our own strength confide, Our striving would be losing, Were not the right Man on our side, The man of God's own Choosing: Dost ask who that may be? Christ Jesus, it is He; Lord Sabaoth, His name, From age to age the same, And He must win the battle. And though this world with devils fill'd Should threaten to undo us, We will not fear, for God hath will's His truth to triumph through us: The prince of darkness grim, We tremble not for him; His rage we can endure, for lo, his doom is sure; One little word shall fell Him. That word above all earthly pow'rs, No thanks to them, abideth; The Spirit and the gifts are ours Through Him who with us sideth. Let goods and kindred go, This mortal life also; The body they may kill: God's truth abideth still; His kingdom is forever, His kingdom is forever, His kingdom is forever and ever.

Our responsibility with the freedoms we have are great and how important a responsibility we have to help nurture and strengthen our Democracy. For our "Statue of Liberty" and democracy is a beacon of freedom in this world.

May the 1990's be a decade of blessing to you and please join me in trying to help people take a new pride in our system by turning around apathy.

God bless,

TED NELSON.●

COLORADAN DALE HANCOCK LEADS HELPFUL RECYCLING PROGRAM

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I would like to recognize Dale Hancock of Garfield County, CO, who has taken the ubiquitous waste problem into his own hands and begun a recycling program that is not only cleaning up his county, but is also putting community service workers and jail inmates to work. As community corrections director for the county, Hancock has modeled his program on a similar one in San Diego, CA, where workfare—welfare—recipients are used for the labor-intensive end of recycling. In the last 10 months, GarCo Recycle, Hancock's name for the program, has generated $5,244, recycling almost 9,000 pounds of aluminum cans, 70,000 pounds of newspaper and over 8,000 pounds of cardboard. But Hancock is not stopping there. Eventually he wants to develop the program so any work beyond required community service could provide restitution money for those sentenced to community service. In a time when waste pollution is having such a huge impact on the world, it is encouraging to see people like Dale Hancock lead us in our quest for a cleaner planet. I ask that an article on this program be inserted in the RECORD.

The article follows:

HE DIDN'T START OUT TO BE AN EXPERT ON RECYCLING

(By John Stroud)

Dale Hancock doesn't consider himself a recycling expert. No, he prefers to look at what he's done for recycling in Garfield County as fulfilling the need, with some ulterior motives to boot.

If the recycling move catches on valley-wide somewhere along the way; so much the better.

"I don't even want to be affiliated with the experts. This isn't brain surgery, it's just moving trash," said Hancock, who, as community corrections director for the county, started GarCo Recycle last summer with the idea of using labor resources provided by community service and jail inmates to make it work.

Whether he likes to admit it or not, since then, recycling has become a serious topic of discussion among various circles, political and otherwise, in and around the Roaring Fork Valley. A few have taken the issue to action, while others discuss it in broad terms. The key is dialogue, Hancock agrees.

"I'm glad people are coming to terms in addressing (recycling) as a regional issue. I'd like to see the elected officials become more committed to the process," said Hancock, who sees a long road ahead for recycling to truly address the problem the country has of producing more waste than ways to deal with it.

"It's a growing everyday problem," and one which Hancock would rather not dwell on from his standpoint.

"People who do, tend to frustrate themselves, which is easy, because of the size or magnitude of the problem. I choose not to look at it that way," said Hancock, 41, who grew up in Arvada—"too damn close to Rocky Flats"—before escaping to the mountains.

"I find our disposal pattern offensive," said Hancock of "throw-away society in action." It should be a simple matter of community pride, he said. "Anyone cannot throw beer cans or kleenex out of their cars, but you see it all the time.

"That's how you get fed up with your fellow man and his habits," Hancock added.

Born of a theory used in San Diego County, Calif., where workfare (welfare) recipients are used for the labor-intensive end of recycling, Hancock brought the idea to Garfield County.

Using the same type of labor provided by community service workers and jail inmates, the program has been a success.

"It's a constructive use of those resources . . . it's logical for any government that has a community service responsibility," Hancock said.

Along with some cooperation from county residents, who do their part to save aluminum cans, newspaper and other recyclables, community service workers also walk the country roads collecting cans.

Hancock then devotes a good part of his Saturdays to oversee the organizing of all the recyclables at the old UPL building across from the courthouse (210 hours since last August). He then transports the trash to Grand Junction (another 76 hours), where it is exchanged for money which goes into the county's general fund.

Through about 10 months, GarCo Recycle has generated $5,244; recyling 8,677 pounds of aluminum cans, 70,000 pounds of newspaper, 3,370 pounds of computer paper, 834 pounds of other paper, 8,213 pounds of cardboard, 421 pounds of scrap aluminum and 15,652 pounds of glass (glass is no longer accepted because of its high volume and low rate of return).

Hancock hopes to develop the program so any work beyond required community service could provide restitution money for those sentenced to community service.

Hancock also invites the private sector to join in the recycling effort, because there will always be a demand beyond his small opertion, he said. "Until then, I'm going to continue," he added.●

S. 865, THE CONSUMER PROTECTION AGAINST PRICE FIXING ACT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to lend my support to S. 865, the Consumer Protection Against Price Fixing Act. This bill would amend the Sherman Act to codify the prohibition on vertical price fixing and would require that price be the major cause of termination of a continuing relationship with price cutting retailers. S. 865 will help preserve lower price options for the American consumer and ensure a competitive retail marketplace.

This bill codifies the per se rule with respect to vertical price restraints, clarifies the evidentiary standard of what constitutes sufficient evidence to make out a prima facie case, and provides that an agreement between a supplier and one of his purchasers to terminate another competing purchaser because of his pricing policies is per se unlawful, whether or not a specific price or price level is agreed upon.

This measure establishes a standard that will protect consumers against illegal pricing schemes, while preserving the right to deal with whomever one pleases.

I am pleased to join as a cosponsor of this bill and urge its prompt passage.●

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the latest budget scorekeeping report for fiscal year 1990, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report was prepared consistent with standard scorekeeping conventions. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

This report shows that current level spending is under the budget resolution by $3.5 billion in budget authority, and over the budget resolution by $4 billion in outlays. Current level is under the revenue floor by $5.2 billion.

The current estimate of the deficit for purposes of calculating the maximum deficit amount under section 311(a) of the Budget Act is $114.6 billion, $14.6 billion above the maximum deficit amount for 1990 of $100 billion.

The report follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, May 14, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of Congressional action on the budget for fiscal year 1990 and is current through May 11, 1990. The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of the 1990 Concurrent Resolution on the Budget (H. Con. Res. 106). This report is submitted under Section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, and meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of Section 5 of S. Con. Res. 32, the 1986 First Concurrent Resolution on the Budget.

Since my last report, dated May 7, 1990, the Congress has cleared for the President's signature the Amtrak Reauthorization and Improvement Act, H.R. 2364. This action decreases the current level estimates of budget authority and revenues.

Sincerely,

ROBERT F. HALE
(For Robert D. Reischauer).

FOR KIDS SAKE

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today to commend an exemplary organization founded in California for the purpose of raising the awareness of law enforcement personnel and the public in general as to the signs of child abuse and suggested action if child abuse is suspected.

For Kids Sake, appropriately named for the child help it provides, was founded in 1974 in Brea by a former Brea police officer, Jim Mead. Since its inception, For Kids Sake has emerged from its counseling and hotline focus of the early 1970's to the large, statewide volunteer organization of local units it is today with primary emphasis on educational seminars and school presentations about the prevention of child abuse.

The success of For Kids Sake is heartwarming, for there are countless stories of compassionate helping hands extended to rescue our young people from the mental and physical devastation of abuse. Founder Mead and his wife, Pat, are the adoptive parents of a daughter who was once abused to the point of brain damage and abandoned by her real parents. From this personal experience in 1968 was born a commitment to help other children and save them from a similar plight.

Because of the outreach efforts of this organization, medical and law enforcement personnel are keenly aware of the signs of child abuse and now realize the value of aggressive questioning and reporting to authorities. There is an illuminating incident of a small boy brought to a hospital emergency room for treatment of injuries; an investigating detective who had been recently trained through For Kids Sake recognized the injuries to have been caused by abuse. Upon further investigation, the child's mother was found to have had two other children who mysteriously died. The mother was eventually arrested and convicted on charges of child abuse. Her son was adopted into a loving home and saved from the same fate which claimed the lives of his siblings.

Last year, this organization reached over 17,000 children with its presentations on abuse and molestation prevention. For Kids Sake is an effective advocate before many civic, educational and law enforcement organizations, and has won deserving recognition and commendation from local and national officials, as well as a White House Volunteer Action Award in 1982.

For Kids Sake is a shining example of volunteerism at its best and what can be accomplished when the well being of our children is at stake. In light of this organization's tremendous strides in the ugly battle we must and are waging against child abuse, it is my honor and privilege to illuminate For Kids Sake's invaluable mission of child help in this Chamber of the U.S. Senate. All who give so generously of their time, caring, and talent on behalf of our children are deserving of our wholehearted support and our collective gratitude.●

RECOGNITION OF NATIONAL POLICE WEEK

● Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I join the Nation in recognizing the law enforcement officers of our country for the extraordinary services they provide and the sacrifices they make on a daily basis. It is appropriate to do so today because May 15, 1990, is Peace Officers Memorial Day, and this week has been designated National Police Week.

This special occasion provides an opportunity to commend the officers of my State of Pennsylvania, as well as the 500,000 sworn law enforcement officers at the Federal, State, and local levels across the United States for the demanding and dangerous work they do.

I have had a long-standing interest in law enforcement. As the former district attorney of Philadelphia, I worked closely with police officials, and was continuously impressed by the skill and dedication which these professionals brought to the job. More recently, in an effort to attract additional qualified individuals to this field, on July 12, 1989, I introduced the Police Corps Act, which would offer educational assistance in exchange for a commitment to 4 years of police service.

I think it is fitting also to mention today the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial, which was authorized by a unanimous act of Congress in 1984 and is presently under construction on Judiciary Square here in Washington, DC. This memorial will honor all men and women who have served as law enforcement officers, and will include the names of all officers who died in the line of duty, including the 161 killed during 1989. The fact that half a million individuals have donated funds for the construction of this memorial is indicative of the American people's admiration of and appreciation for law enforcement officers.

Public service, particularly in the area of law enforcement, is a high calling and a demanding one. It is altogther fitting and appropriate, then, that the Nation pay tribute to the men and women who have chosen to serve our communities in this honorable profession.●

THE SBLC RECOGNIZES THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF SENATOR DAVID PRYOR

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I noted with interest in the May 1990 edition of the National Association of Retail Druggists [NARD] Journal that Senator DAVID PRYOR, my good friend and colleague on the Finance and Agriculture Committees, was presented the Small Business Advocate Award for his commitment to small business by the Small Business Legislative Council [SBLC].

The SBLC, which has 103 association members serving over 4 million small enterprises, represents small business on a variety of issues in Washington, and its recognition of Senator PRYOR's commitment to ensuring that the concerns of American small business are represented in the legislative process is significant. I can think of no one more deserving of the Small Business Advocate Award than Senator PRYOR, and I ask that the attached article from the NARD Journal be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The article follows:

SENATOR DAVID PRYOR, SMALL BUSINESS ADVOCATE

SMALL BUSINESS SUPPORT

Pryor has undertaken numerous activities on behalf of small business. Pryor is the chairman of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, which is currently holding hearings on multitier pricing practices in the pharmaceutical industry, and serves on several other Senate committees, including Agriculture, Finance, and Governmental Affairs. he is also a member of the Pepper Commission and is working to ensure that small business concerns are addressed in reforms being considered by the commission.

In part because of Pryor's recent initiatives addressing discriminatory pricing, some are attempting to label Pryor as anti-small business—a charge that is completely false, as reflected in the Council's award.

"Sen. David Pryor's approach to his responsibilities as a U.S. senator exemplifies what we believe is the appropriate approach to the public policy process," said the SBLC chairman during the award ceremony. "He seeks out advice and counsel at the earliest stages of a debate from all parties, including small business.

"More importantly," the chairman said, "the senator has consistently demonstrated a willingness to undertake the soemtimes difficult task of finding a solution that will address the particular concerns of small business within the context of a broader public policy debate. While we could point to specific accomplishments, this award is given on the basis of an individual's commitment to a public policy process that ensures small business' voice is heard, considered, and represented.

"For this commitment to small business, we have conferred upon Sen. David Pryor our Small Business Advocate Award."

A SENATE LEADER

Pryor is a veteran politician. After serving three full terms in the House of Representatives, he was elected to the first of two terms as governor of Arkansas. In 1979, he was elected to the Senate.

Ten years later, he was elected chairman of the Democatic Caucus in the Senate—making him arguably the third most powerful lawmaker in the Senate.

While serving on the Senate Finance Committee, Pryor wrote "The Taxpayers Bill of Rights." It was enacted in 1988 and ensures that the nation's tax collection and penalty system is fair and equitable to all citizens and businesses.

Last year, Pryor played a leading role in helping small business during the battle to repeal Section 89 of the tax code, which would have placed onerous new burdens on small businesses. He also helped pass legislation allowing sole proprietors and self-employed people to continue taking a 25 percent health insurance deduction and wrote a bill providing a tax credit to small businesses that spend money to adapt their facilities for the disabled.

Throughout his career, Pryor has been honored by various small business groups for his contributions. On several occasions, he has earned the National Federation of Independent Business' "Guardian of Small Business Award." In 1987, he received the Small Business Council of America's "Congressional Award" for outspoken efforts on behalf of the small business community on tax matters.

It's readily apparent that Pryor, who was the founder and publisher of a weekly newspaper, The Ouachita Citizen, in Arkansas, is sensitive to the needs of America's small businesses. And he makes sure that members of his staff are aware of those needs as well.

Pryor, during the first August recess in his first term as senator, shipped staff members home to Arkansas with instructions to take at least two jobs in areas where they had never worked before. Pryor's staff worked in small rural banks, gas stations, grocery stores, feed stores, local cafes, and other small businesses—learning about the concerns of America's small business owners and how they can help represent those interests in Washington.●

PROPOSED SOVIET OBSERVER STATUS IN GATT

The story on the right reports that Soviet President Gorbachev yesterday "officially rejected moves toward independence taken by Latvia and Estonia, saying the two Baltic republics lacked any legal basis for their attempts to leave the Soviet Union." The story further reports that "when a group of Soviet Army officers and soldiers gathered yesterday in front of the Latvian Parliament" to protest laws passed by this democratically elected body, "scuffles broke out" in which "soldiers reportedly hit a woman and roughed up a radio reporter."

Meanwhile, the story on the left reports that "Moscow is expected to be granted observer status—in GATT—this week at the urging of the Bush administration."

Mr. President, to reward Moscow with this trade benefit sends precisely the wrong message at the wrong time. Rather than rewarding the Soviets for their aggressive actions against the Baltic States, the United States should be doing everything possible to encourage them to respond to the Balts' peaceful overtures with conciliatory gestures of their own.

Our government has called for mutual restraint and a negotiated settlement to the Baltic-Soviet crisis. The Balts have taken this call to heart: The Lithuanian Government has agreed to suspend all independence-related laws other than the independence declaration itself, and the Latvian and Estonian parliaments drafted their declarations in terms specifically designed to facilitate a gradual, negotiated transfer of power from Moscow to the republics.

However, as Lithuanian Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene aptly pointed out in her recent testimony to the Helsinki Commission, "compromises cannot all come just from one side, or they are no longer compromises, but rather the subjugation of the weaker by the stronger." To date, conciliatory Baltic gestures have been met with nothing but continued intransigence and escalating aggression from Moscow. Last Wednesday the Washington Post cited the deputy commander of the Soviet army garrison in Vilnius as "calling for direct rule of Lithuania from Moscow," proclaiming ominously that "an escalation of events could force the army to be pulled into the whirlpool." Meanwhile, military convoys continue to rumble intermittently through Vilnius, and a Lithuanian member of parliament was beaten severely by Soviet troops. Today and yesterday in Riga, according to one journalist's eyewitness account, many of the anti-independence demonstrators outside the Latvian parliament were uniformed "Soviet military personnel and cadets from the Riga military academy." In leaflets scattered from helicopters over Riga yesterday, the pro-Soviet Interfront group urged Riga residents to leave their workplaces and join the demonstration, denouncing the democratically elected parliament as a "handful of traitors and political adventurers," and issuing an inflammatory call to violence. The leaflet declares:

Comrades! Let us rise up in defense of Soviet power in Latvia. The time for orators has passed, it is time to move from words to deeds. Our fate is being decided today. * * * Let disdain and shame cover the descendants of those who in this decisive hour do not come out against counter-revolution. Men—look into the eyes of your children, mothers and wives. Can you leave them defenseless?

According to Latvian-American analysts, this leaflet drop "could not have taken place without encouragement or approval from the highest authorities in the Soviet Government in Moscow"—American Latvian Association news release.

Mr. President, on April 26, I was joined by several Senators in introducing Senate Resolution 276, a sense-of-the-Senate resolution stating that until the Soviet Government replaces its policy of force, intimidation and economic coercion against Lithuania with one of good-faith negotiations, the United States Government should not proceed with United States-Soviet trade talks and not consider the granting of most-favored-nation trade status nor support the granting of observer status in GATT for the U.S.S.R. Furthermore, the resolution urged our government to "be prepared to take similar actions should the Soviet Government extend its coercive practices against the republics of Estonia and Latvia." Subsequently, the Senate adopted by a vote of 73 to 24 an amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill stating that the President should not submit to the Senate any trade agreements as long as the Soviets refuse to negotiate with Lithuania.

Apparently unmoved by either the continuing Soviet aggression in the Baltic States, or the Senate's call for an appropriate United States response to that aggression, the Bush administration has concluded the United States-Soviet trade talks and has conditionally agreed to grant the Soviets MFN status. And now, in the latest in the series of green-light signals sent to Moscow, the Bush administration plans to urge granting of Soviet observer status in GATT.

In a commencement address last Saturday, President Bush declared that "the fate of freedom in Eastern Europe depends not just on the character of the people who govern, but whether they themselves are governed by the rule of law." America's "unfinished business," he noted, is to help the new democracies build "political systems based on respect for individual freedom, for the right to speak our mind, to live as we wish, to worship as our conscience tells us we must." Now is the time, he urged the graduates, "to uphold our American ideals, not in time of war, but in a time of tremendous excitement, helping these nations secure the freedom your fathers and grandfathers fought for."

Mr. President, I applaud President Bush's remarks, and I would urge him to apply this reasoning to the current Baltic-Soviet standoff. Let us judge the Soviet leaders, including President Gorbachev, not by our interpretations of their character, but by whether they abide by the rule of law. And let us "uphold our American ideals" by helping our friends in Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia to reestablish their independent, democratic political systems.

If the United States Government truly is committed to a nonviolent negotiated settlement of the Baltic crisis, now is the time to use all responsible means—including the powerful tool of withholding economic benefits—to pressure the Soviet leadership to end all aggression and provocation in the Baltics and to respond to the Baltic governments' ongoing calls for negotiations. To reward the Soviets at this ugly moment in their history is a betrayal not only of our Baltic friends, but a betrayal of our own honor and principles as champions of democracy.●

NATHAN JAMES WEATE, LAMONI MIDDLE SCHOOL

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, Nathan James Weate, a teacher at Lamoni Middle School, wrote an editorial for the Des Moines Register which appeared on April 30, 1990, about the value of small rural schools. Being a product of such schools myself his thoughts really resonated with me and I found a lot of his observations to be very perceptive and I believe adaptable in school systems in larger cities. I especially like his observation that "crossing of socioeconomic lines happens in urban high schools, but such happenings are not expected. Crossing of socioeconomic lines not only happens in rural high schools, it is not considered unusual." There is a lot to be said for the type of learning, the stability and this crossing of socioeconomic lines in rural schools that really add to the strength of America. Quite frankly, this is one Senator that believes that a lot of this could be adapted to our urban schools. I ask that the article be placed in the RECORD following my comments.

The article follows:

[From the Des Moines Register, Apr. 30, 1990]

STUDENTS ARE STRENGTH OF RURAL SCHOOLS

(By Nathan James Weate)

Having taught in the big city—in the same building, in fact, where "Teachers" (United Artists, 1985, starring Nick Nolte and JoBeth Williams) was filmed—I can attest that the rural students who are in my wife's and my classrooms are different, to be sure, from urban students. These differences are brought about largely by the rural environment and small schools, my wife Gwen and I maintain. We want to see small schools survive because of the impact they have upon students' lives. They create a different kind of person.

I started teaching 32 years ago and taught for six years in big-city junior- and senior-high schools. Then I dropped out of the profession for 20 years while Gwen and I were living in rural America. I returned to teaching in Lamoni, IA, six years ago. Before I reentered the schools, Gwen had begun teaching in Eagleville, MO, 10 miles south of Lamoni. She had done her student teaching several years before in a city high school, so she had a teaching background similar to mine. She noticed a decided difference between urban and rural students. It was her satisfaction with teaching in the rural environment that helped persuade me to reenter the classroom.

Small enrollments in rural school districts result in each grade level having only a handful of students. Students nearly become family to each other by the time the senior year is reached, regardless of the differences between and among each other, differences of economics, academics and lifestyle, which in the circumstances of a large-city environment would almost completely divide students.

In a small school, the son or daughter of the area's wealthiest citizen might date or be best friends with the son or daughter of the area's poorest citizen; in a small school the school's best student might be the best friend of or date the school's lowest achieving student; and the student who likes Chopin and Shakespeare but despises Madonna and the Mets might date or be best friends of the student who despises Chopin and Shakespeare but adores Madonna and the Mets. The question is not, "Could such crossing of economic, academic, or lifestyle lines happen at an urban high school?"; rather, the question is, "Does the crossing of such lines occur significantly more often at rural high schools than at urban schools?" We have an emphatic answer: Crossing of socioeconomic lines happens in urban high schools, but such happenings are not expected; crossing of socioeconomic lines not only happens in rural high schools, it is not considered unusual.

We are aware we are comparing small rural schools with large urban schools. We are unaware of what circumstances are created when several small rural schools are consolidated into one large rural school. Our expectation is that such consolidations would tend to result in schools that resemble large urban schools because of students being involved in fewer activities.

The smallness of most rural schools results in students' being involved in all kinds of school activities. The halfback on the football team, the senior representative on the student council, the male lead in the senior class play, the point guard on the basketball team, the trombone player in the orchestra, and the salutatorian are all the same person in a rural high school.

In an urban school, these would all be different people.

Small rural schools create highly diversified students who are strong-willed, generally capable and highly involved individuals, but these students do not achieve the degree of attainment in any field of endeavor that the highly specialized athlete, dramatist, or academic does in the large city school.

The rural-school student is more relaxed all the way through his or her school days because of the steadying influence that a familiar group in a famliar environment creates.

Rural students are not as motivated, specialized, or sophisticated as their big-city counterparts; most rural students are serious-minded, stable, dedicated individuals, and we believe they are the way they are partly, if not largely, due to the influence of small, rural schools.

We like students such as we have, those rural students we find so fascinating, challenging and different.

Different, to be sure, and the kind of students we truly love to have in our rural-school classrooms.●

TRIBUTE TO PAT KERR

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, today I rise to pay tribute to one of America's leading fashion designers, Ms. Pat Kerr. Pat has won international acclaim for her unique approach to fashion, one which combines the beauty of fine-crafted heirloom lace with exquisite antique fabrics.

Pat, a native Tennessean, divides her time between Memphis and London. She is currently doing a series of fashion shows in New York and in other cities across the country. Her designs appear often in high fashion publications and have also been featured on the "Today Show" and "Good Morning America." Last year, Pat won Bride magazine's Marketer of the Year Award. She has been very active in promoting charity, doing fashion shows on behalf of the American Cancer Society and Volunteers of America, among others.

The Orpheum Theater in Memphis has been chosen as the site for a celebration this Saturday, May 19, to commemorate the 10th anniversary of Pat's business—Pat Kerr, Inc.—as well as Pat Halloran's 10th year as director of the theater. This gala event will feature a fashion showing of Pat's designs. It is appropriate that on this very special occasion, Memphians will have a rare opportunity to share Pat's special talent. I am sure it will be quite a show.

Mr. President, I join my fellow Tennesseans in honoring Pat Kerr on this special occasion, and I wish her continued success.●

THE GRAVEYARD DESECRATIONS IN FRANCE

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the desecrations last week of three Jewish cemeteries in France are among the most alarming incidents of anti-Semitism in Europe in recent years.

No decent person can help but be outraged by these attacks. Unfortunately, they seem to be part of a larger pattern emerging throughout Europe. In recent months, there have been many reports of open and growing anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe—the so-called dark side of glasnost. The cemetery desecrations demonstrate that while we clearly must keep a close eye on events in that rapidly changing area of the world, we must also remain vigilant in our watch for religiously and racially motivated attacks in other areas. We must never forget that, in the past, xenophobia signaled the beginning of some of the darkest periods in the history of all of Europe.

The reaction of the majority of the French to these attacks has been heartening; tens of thousands of French citizens, both Jews and non-Jews, have gathered together to protest the desecrations and to condemn the rhetoric of groups like Jean-Marie Le Pen's National Front. And it is encouraging to see all the major political parties, with the exception of the National Front, joining the protests. In an admirable effort to educate the French, France's major television stations cancelled their regular programming in order to broadcast a documentary on the Nazi death camps. But these efforts should not stop when this crisis blows over—history has shown there are likely to be more.●

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMISSION ON AVIATION SECURITY AND TERRORISM

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, today the Commission on Aviation Security and Terrorism, of which I was proud to have been a member, submitted its findings and recommendations to the President of the United States.

Before summarizing the Commission's report, I first would like to recount for my colleagues the events leading up to the creation of this Commission, and the work done by the Commission.

I would also like to thank those with whom I worked on the Commission. Chairperson Ann McLaughlin guided the Commission in a thorough, tough, and professional manner. All of my fellow Commissioners put in hard work and long hours to learn the truth and supply the answers. The other Commissioners—Senator ALFONSE D'AMATO, Congressman JAMES OBERSTAR, Congressman JOHN PAUL HAMMERSCHMIDT, Mr. Edward Hidalgo, and Gen. Thomas C. Richards, USAF (retired), deserve much credit for their dedication to our mission. I would also like to pay tribute to the staff for their outstanding work over the last 8 months.

BACKGROUND

The bombing of Pan Am flight 103 took place almost a year and a half ago. But, the memory is still fresh for the families and friends of the 270 innocent victims of that bombing. And the painful lesson that we, as a nation, learned must never be forgotten. With the bombing of Pan Am 103, we learned that innocent people, simply because most were Americans, can be ruthlessly murdered by cowardly terrorist attacks, no matter where they are, no matter how detached they are from government and its policies.

Let me say at this point that Americans are not alone in this. Nor are U.S. carriers alone in being targeted by terrorists. I do not believe that there is any basis for assertions that our carriers may be less safe than foreign carriers. In fact, the regulations and requirements U.S. carriers must comply with are often more stringent than those required of foreign carriers by their governments.

That has to change. Terrorism exists throughout the world. Its efforts are targeted at innocent people of almost every race, creed, and color. The civilized world must protect its law-abiding citizens from such vile attacks. Our Government has a clear responsibility for protecting Americans. And it was on that responsibility that our work focused.

Following the bombing, the families and friends of the vicitms of Pan Am 103 pressed for action, and pressed for answers. They wanted to know who was responsible for the deaths of their loved ones. They wanted to know how it could have been allowed to happen. And they wanted to know how it could be prevented from happening again.

FORMATION OF THE COMMISSION

I shared their frustrations, and their desire to protect others from suffering the same grief they were enduring. On March 17, 1989, I submitted Senate Resolution 86, calling on the President to appoint a special commission to investigate the events surrounding the bombing, and aviation security generally.

Unfortunately, the administration resisted. But, I firmly believe that, after reading the Commission's report, the administration will recognize that it will be an important tool in the efforts to better protect American travelers.

Under continuing pressure from the families and friends of the victims, the President finally agreed, and a Commission was named in October 1989. I would like to commend the President for taking this action, and for giving the Commission the mandate to a job that needed to be done. I would also like to note the efforts of the majority leader, Senator MITCHELL, in seeing this Commission created. His help and leadership were instrumental.

The Commission's hearing began in November and continued through April of this year. Additionally, the Commission and its staff conducted extensive research, taking them to airports, research facilities, and meetings with persons involved in aviation security throughout the United States and abroad.

The Commission was charged with assessing aviation security policies and practices, those in place now and at the time of the Pan Am 103 bombing, and to make recommendations for improving aviation security. The result of those efforts is embodied in the report presented to the President today.

MAJOR FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Perhaps the greatest tragedy in all of this is that the bombing may well have been prevented. While we can never provide an ironclad guarantee against terrorism, we can make it more difficult for terrorism to win. That is what our security system is supposed to do.

However, that is not what it did in Frankfurt and Heathrow with Pan Am. There were gaping holes throughout the system. Through one of these holes slipped the bomb that killed 270 innocent people.

The Commission found an aviation security system that was sorely lacking. As implemented, principally by the Federal Aviation Administration, it had failed to keep pace with the changing times. At a time when bombings already had become the preferred method for terrorists, the security program was still aimed largely at preventing hijackings.

There were shortcomings in virtually all areas: The gathering, assessment, and dissemination of intelligence; the Federal Government's oversight of airline and airport activities; counterterrorism research and development; our Government's response to tragedies; and in the area of negotiations and agreements with foreign governments, a responsibility shared by the Departments of State and Transportation.

All in all, the Commission has made 64 recommendations to improve our aviation security system. I will not try to recount them all for my colleagues. Instead, I will touch on a few key recommendations illustrating the range of issues covered.

Broadly, the Commission calls for a strengthened response to terrorism. The United States must make it clear to terrorists that their acts will not go unpunished. We should not negotiate on equal terms with terrorists, or nations that sponsor terrorism. And, our Government must work with others to isolate and cut off terrorists from their support.

As long as the civilized nations of the world look the other way, they condone terrorism, and will continue to be victimized by it.

Within the U.S. Government, the Commission found that aviation security has not been given the priority it deserves. The security function is buried deep within the FAA, isolated from the Administrator, and even more so from the Secretary of Transportation.

The Commission has recommended that the intelligence and policy functions of the FAA security office be elevated, and placed under a new Assistant Secretary of Transportation for Security and Intelligence. This new assistant secretariat would oversee those operations not just for civil aviation, but also for other modes of transportation, such as maritime.

A major weakness exists in FAA's oversight of the airlines' security efforts. Minimum standards for security personnel do not exist. There is no regular onsite presence to ensure that the carriers are complying with requirements, or that the requirements are adequate or appropriate.

The Commission has recommended that the FAA develop minimum standards for hiring, training, and employing people to perform security functions. Additionally, the FAA should place Federal security managers at high-risk airports here and abroad. Those managers would be charged with overseeing the airlines' compliance with security mandates. They would be ultimately responsible for ensuring adequate safety for those traveling on U.S. carriers.

The Commission also found major flaws in the FAA's research and development efforts. Too much of those efforts was focused on a technology known as thermal neutron analysis, or TNA. This technology is able to detect some plastic explosives in baggage. However, in addition to operational problems, it has a major limitation—it cannot detect plastic explosives in small quantities; quantities that are still large enough to destroy an airliner. Part of the fault for this lies with FAA's approach to developing bomb detection technology—they tried to match a solution with a then-unclear problem.

TNA, as it exists, is a beginning technology. Its presence implies safety, but the level of assurance is slim, at best. The Commission has recommended an intensive, accelerated R&D program, with a short-term goal of providing travelers with more than just a sense of security.

The Commission also found major flaws in the way our Government responds to terrorist incidents. The State Department was unprepared to deal in a sensitive and efficient manner with the surviving family members of the victims of Pan Am 103. The Commission has made a number of recommendations to rectify this situation. It has also recommended that survivors of civilians killed by terrorists receive compensation to help them through a difficult period of adjustment. We now provide such assistance to Government workers and contractors. Further, the Commission has recommended that the Montreal protocols amending the Warsaw Convention be ratified, to raise the level of compensation provided in the event of disasters like the Pan Am 103 bombing.

IMPLEMENTING THE COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATIONS

The Commission's report is a step in the process of making air travel more secure for Americans. Many of the Commission's 64 recommendations can be accomplished through administrative action. We have discussed the recommendations with Secretary Skinner, and I know that he is committed to making the system better, and Americans more secure in the process. I urge the administration to move ahead quickly to make those needed changes.

But a number of the recommendations call on the Congress to act. Senator D'AMATO and I are working on comprehensive legislation to carry through on those recommendations. The legislation will encompass virtually all of the areas covered by the Commission.

We plan to introduce that legislation in the very near future. I look forward to working with my colleagues to see the Commission's recommendations put into place.

In closing, I would like to assure the families and friends of those killed on Pan Am 103 that my efforts will continue. Many of the gaps in our aviation security have been identified, and recommendations have been made to close those holes.

Unfortunately, no one can guarantee that there will never be another bombing of a commercial airliner. But our job will not be over until we have done all we can to reduce the chances of it ever happening again.●

CONFERENCE ON MISCELLANEOUS TARIFF BILL, H.R. 1594

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, as my colleagues know, I am a longstanding supporter of the Caribbean Basin Initiative [CBI]. I therefore hope that Senate conferees will retain the ethanol provision which is included in the House version of this legislation.

The issue of CBI ethanol has been a contentious topic for the past several years. Fortunately, last year all the parties involved, both United States and Caribbean producers, agreed to a compromise which promotes jobs and economic growth in the Caribbean while protecting United States producers from any sizable import penetration.

There are some who believe that Caribbean ethanol should be connected with the extension of the existing tax credit for ethanol. That might be a logical arrangement under other circumstances, but in this instance it creates more problems than it solves.

First, the current CBI ethanol language, which was included in the steel VRA bill last year, expires in 1991. The tax credit does not expire until 1992. We could end up with a yearlong gap. Anyone who has followed this issue knows that Caribbean ethanol producers have faced more uncertainty than perhaps any other industry in the region. Delaying a permanent enactment of the compromise would be one more hurdle which is unfair and unnecessary.

Second, the tax credit for ethanol is already tied together for both CBI and U.S. producers. Without the tax credit, neither will produce ethanol; it is economically infeasible.

Third, the tax credit is a tax issue. The extension of the CBI is trade legislation that I, and many of my colleagues, have worked very hard to push forward. Diluting the issue further by dragging in tax matters is inappropriate.

It seems to me that after all these years of disagreement, we should delight in an agreement which satisfies both Caribbean and United States ethanol producers. I urge my Senate colleagues to accept the House provision on Caribbean ethanol.●

IRANIAN PERSECUTION OF THE BAHA'IS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 467, House Concurrent Resolution 87, regarding the Baha'is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 87) concerning Iranian persecution of the Baha'is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I would like to make a statement in support of House Concurrent Resolution 87. The Senate version of that concurrent resolution is one that I submitted last June with the cosponsorship of many of our colleagues to call continuing attention to the plight of the Baha'i religious minority in Iran. With Senators who joined us later this concurrent resolution now has 60 cosponsors.

Most of my colleagues are painfully aware of the tragedy that befell the peace-loving Baha'i community as a result of the takeover of Iran by the fanatically intolerant regime that continues to rule it. The only crime of the Baha'is has been to profess belief in their faith and the divine authority of its peace-loving founder.

More than 200 Baha'is have been executed in Iran since the Khomeini takeover. Today his successors continue to torment the small law-abiding Baha'i community which is still outlawed. Therefore, it is time again to call the attention of the Government of Iran to the international norms of civilized behavior.

I want my colleagues to be aware that our resolutions, our protests are not without results. Due to persistent international pressure the repression of the Baha'is has been eased somewhat in recent years, and our concurrent resolution takes note of that. On the other hand, this year's human rights report by our State Department reiterates the fact that widespread discrimination against and persecution of the Baha'i community continues. To quote the report:

The Government continues to attack the Baha'i community as a front for political and espionage activities, and prohibits the community from electing leaders or conducting religious activities.

Mr. President, the oppressed Baha'is continue to need our help. By agreeing to this concurrent resolution, our colleagues can take a small step in trying to restrain and eliminate religious intolerance from this world.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 53, a concurrent resolution concerning Iranian persecution of the Baha'is. I am saddened and angered that there is a need for such a resolution. Once again, as in 1982, 1984, and 1988, the people of the United States, through their elected Representatives in the Congress of the United States, are declaring that they hold the Government of Iran responsible for respecting the basic and fundamental human rights of all its citizens, including those people who are members of the Baha'is faith.

The Government of Iran continues to deny the members of the Baha'is faith the fundamental rights to which they are entitled under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, of which Iran is a signatory. These rights which have and are being denied Baha'is and members of other religious minorities in Iran include the right to practice their religion, the right to life, liberty, conscience, and security of person, the freedom from torture, and the right to education and gainful employment.

Mr. President, while there have been reports of some relative improvements in the treatment of Baha'is in Iran, their treatment is still far short of all standards of acceptable conduct by the Iranian Government. This resolution calls on our Government, other governments, and international bodies to continue to appeal to the Government of Iran to cease its persecution of Baha'is. Additionally, this resolution states that Iran's human rights practices, particularly Iran's treatment of Baha'is and other religious minorities, is and should be an important factor in any development of future United States-Iranian relations.

Mr. President, individuals in the Baha'is community in Iran have suffered torture and execution. The Iranian regime considers them infidels guilty of heresy, and thus excluded them from the protections of basic human rights. We should do what we can to correct this affront to human decency. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this concurrent resolution, and I urge its immediate adoption.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today in support of House Concurrent Resolution 87 and Senate Concurrent Resolution 53, regarding the Government of Iran's repression of the Baha'is.

The Baha'is, Iran's largest religious minority and community of nearly 350,000 members, have suffered cruelly for more than a decade of brutal rule under the Islamic Republic of Iran, living in constant fear of execution, imprisonment, torture, and other vicious forms of persecution. In keeping with our own Nation's best principles, the United States must continue to condemn such acts and the concurrent resolution before us is a forceful means to address the bitter experience of this vulnerable people and call for international cooperation on behalf of the Baha'is.

In recent years there has been an encouraging decline in the number of executions, and cases of torture and imprisonment. Prisoners have been released and seized properties have been partially returned to their rightful owners. Nonetheless, the Iranian Government continues to deny to the Baha'is the basic freedoms and rights recognized by the international community and expressed in the U.N. Universal Declaration of Human Rights, thus denying to them the fundamental protection needed against a resurgence of arrest, imprisonment, torture, and the death sentence.

Because the Government of Iran has consistently denied to the Baha'is the legal status of a recognized religious minority and equal protection of the laws, they have been unable to practice their faith. The right of peaceful assembly has been outlawed and places of worship have been desecrat-

ed. Flagrant discrimination has been waged against the Baha'is in education and employment.

Indeed the State Department, in the "Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 1989," has carefully looked at the treatment of the Baha'is in Iran and I ask unanimous consent that the relevant section of this document be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Government continues to discriminate against the Baha'i community, Iran's largest non-Muslim minority (300,000 to 350,000 members). The Special Representative [United Nations Special Rapporteur Reynaldo Galindo Pohl] stated in his 1989 Report that information he received indicated that Baha'is are still being harassed for their faith. The Baha'i religion, an offshoot of Islam, is considered a "misguided sect" by the authorities and is not officially recognized. Between 1979 and 1988 the Baha'is suffered severe persecution, mainly government directed and aimed at the religious leadership.

In 1983 the Prosecutor General issued an order that effectively banned all Baha'i religious activity and provided the legal foundation on which virtually all members of the faith can be charged with crimes. Baha'i property was confiscated, shrines demolished, businesses disbanded or confiscated, and known Baha'is denied public sector employment and social services. Baha'i marriages are still not recognized. Baha'is are forbidden to participate in social welfare organizations, their businesses are outlawed, and they may not teach their faith. Baha'i national leaders dissolved the community's organizations in obedience to the Prosecutor General's edict, but they subsequently were arrested, and at least some were executed. Many ordinary Baha'is were also arrested on vague charges.

In some important respects, the Government has ameliorated its treatment of the Baha'is. No Baha'is were reported to have been arrested or executed in 1989; the number of Baha'is held in prison fell to fewer than 15. A small number of Baha'is have been issued visas to leave the country. Some Baha'i property confiscated by the Government was returned, although the amount represents a fraction of the total seized. Baha'i children are now permitted to attend grade school and high school (although Baha'is cannot attend college or be employed on college faculties.) Some Baha'is were allowed quietly to reopen their businesses.

The Government has not officially abandoned its anti-Baha'i policies; widespread discrimination against, and persecution of, the community persists. The Government continues to attack the Baha'i community as a front for political and espionage activities, and prohibits the community from electing leaders or conducting religious activities.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, this matter has been held high on the congressional agenda for some time. The Congress has repeatedly expressed its concern in the past with similar resolutions in 1982, 1984, and 1988. These efforts have successfully addressed the plight of the Baha'is by generating international pressure to bear on the Iranian Government. Therefore I would strongly urge that my colleagues take another small but important step and support Senate Concurrent Resolution 53 which condemns a continuing and intolerable situation.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, despite a change in its leadership, Iran continues to deny fundamental human rights to its largest religious minority, the Baha'is.

The State Department's 1989 Human Rights Report states that Iran continues to be a major violator of human rights, citing the "continuing repression of the Baha'is religious community" as a particularly egregious example of religious intolerance. In late January, a special representative of the United Nations visited Iran for the first time to investigate numerous charges of human rights violations. His report fully confirmed that the Baha'is of Iran are systematically deprived of their fundamental religious rights. On February 27, our colleagues in the House of Representatives called for an end to the Iranian persecution of the Baha'is with a vote of 404–0 in support of House Concurrent Resolution 87. This sent a strong signal to Iran and timely support for the U.N. Human Rights Commission which voted in early March to condemn violations of human rights in Iran, expressing particular concern about the repression of the Baha'i religious minority.

Since 1979, more than 200 Baha'is have been executed in Iran, including women and teenage girls, by the Islamic regime. Evidence indicates that recent improvements in the situation of individual Baha'is, which include no executions since December 1988, result from the continuing demonstration of concern by the international community of which the U.S. Government has played an instrumental role. However, we are not content with only the cessation of state-sponsored violence against the Iranian Baha'i leadership. Iranian Baha'is are still not permitted to meet as a religious community, to have places of worship or to maintain the institutions of their faith. In short, Iranian Baha'is are still considered "unprotected infidels" with no rights under law to practice their religion.

I have supported previous congressional appeals for the religious rights of Iranian Baha'is, and am pleased to cosponsor Senate Concurrent Resolution 53, which calls for the emancipation of the Baha'i community in Iran. Broad support of this resolution will, without question, send another strong signal to Iran and support the U.N. Economic and Social Council when it considers the resolution on Iran in the next weeks.

Thus, I urge my collegues to support Senate Concurrent Resolution 53 and vote to send Iran the message that the United States will continue to speak out against human rights violations until the Baha'is and other minority groups in Iran have secured their basic human rights guaranteed under international law.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, the past year has witnessed a remarkable series of positive developments for human liberty and political freedom around the world. But one country long under the dark cloud of religious extremism, the Islamic Republic of Iran, has not yet decided to join the community of nations that guarantees its own citizen's fundamental human rights.

Today the Senate will adopt House Concurrent Resolution 87, a companion to Senate Concurrent Resolution 53, a bipartisan expression of concern with the continuing injustices inflicted on Iran's Baha'is. The House vote was unanimous, and I am confident the Senate tally will be the same.

The message of this concurrent resolution is clear: Americans still care about human rights, and particularly about the odious practice of religious oppression.

As our concurrent resolution points out, things have improved inside Iran. Most importantly, no Iranian Baha'is have been executed for 2 years. Perhaps as few as three Baha'is remain in jail for their beliefs. This is much better than before, and Americans take note of this change, but the fact that systematic discrimination continues only underlines the horror of the Baha'is experience since the Islamic Revolution of 1979.

The Baha'is of Iran still suffer comprehensive persecution as so-called unprotected infidels. This persecution can include arbitrary imprisonment, inability to educate their children, and prohibitions against normal business and personal activities—even the right to a legally recognized marriage.

In a world where the Berlin Wall has crumbled, where people power has toppled a dictator in the Philippines, where Latin American countries have reclaimed their democratic heritage, the Iranian mistreatment of its own citizens is impossible to ignore and impossible to tolerate.

We call on the Government of Iran today to take a giant step toward reentering the international mainstream, to rebuilding Iran's rightfully prominent international position, by adopting a civilized and tolerant attitude toward all of its religious minorities, including the Baha'is. Foreign activities, including the continued support of those holding American hostages in Lebanon, are important areas where Iran must prove it is deserving of improved international stature. But fundamental internal issues, such as official oppression of a religious minority, cannot be ignored in the world of the 1990's.

Iran's mistreatment of the Baha'is is a moral outrage, but is also a concrete obstacle to further progress in Iran's efforts to assume its place in global affairs. It is time this obstacle was eliminated.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, the Senate's action today on Senate Concurrent Resolution 53, dealing with the Baha'is in Iran, is both timely and warranted. As we once again express our continuing determination to help the Baha'is we can take pride in the fact that, true to our own traditions and heritages, we are acting on behalf of those whose rights are being unfairly limited. The right to practice freely one's religion is a basic human right, and the repression of the Baha'is is the leading example in the world today of purely religious persecution.

The Iranian Baha'is are denied the right to carry on the normal activities of a law-abiding community. They are denied the right to organize, hold property, operate religious schools, and carry out the numerous other activities that are allowed the overwhelming majority of Iranians. While the repression directed against individual Baha'is has recently become less severe, a development which I applaud, they still, unfortunately, face many unwarranted restrictions as a group.

I call upon the Iranian Government to recognize the Baha'is as a legitimate community, and to guarantee to them all of the rights available to Iran's other citizens. The Baha'is should be the equal of any other group within Iranian society both in terms of the obligations they assume and the rights they enjoy.

I have long supported the Baha'i cause and am honored to be an original cosponsor of this concurrent resolution. The widespread support for such legislation in both the Senate and the House demonstrates the ongoing concern with which Congress views the plight of the Baha'is.

I note that the U.N. Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution earlier this year requesting that the U.N. Special Representative for Iran present an interim report on the human rights situation in Iran, "including the situation of minority groups, such as the Baha'is" at the 45th session of the U.N. General Assembly. Later this week the U.N.'s Economic and Social Council is scheduled to vote on the UNCHR resolution. I strongly encourage that the resolution be approved. Such U.N. actions show most clearly that concern for the Baha'is is an issue of international interest. I urge Iran to take proper note of this, and to cooperate fully with the U.N.'s representative when he returns to Iran.

Mr. President, it is altogether fitting to note at this time that there are also other peaceable groups within Iran which are being repressed. At the same time as we call on the Iranian Government to eliminate its restrictions against the Baha'is, we must also ask that it extend the full range of human rights to all sectors of Iranian society. Iran should be encouraged to extent to all of its citizens the rights guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international covenants to which Iran has acceded.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I rise in support of Senate Concurrent Resolution 53, the Baha'i resolution. Concerted and consistent international public opinion can affect even the most hardened, inhumane political regimes. One measure of its effect is the slow but certain progress of the Baha'is in their desperate struggle for physical and spiritual survival in the Iran of the ayatollahs.

Official persecution of the Baha'i community in Iran persists, but the imprisonment, torture, and executions have, thank God, ceased for the moment. Seven Baha'is currently endure imprisonment for their faith, compared to an average of 750 during the middle years of the last decade. Since 1988, Iran no longer executes Baha'is—including teenage girls—for their religious devotion. This present cessation of the most horrible acts of official persecution is, of course, very welcome. But it is not sufficient cause for a dulling of international sensitivity to the plight of Iranian Baha'is. On the contrary, it should encourage us to persist in condemning every instance when a Baha'i cannot practice his faith without confronting the theocratic imperialism of the Government of Iran.

International opposition to Iranian persecution of Baha' is has been successful up to a point. An important component of that opposition has been the vocal support for Iranian Baha' is that the United States Congress has provided in three concurrent resolutions. We should not underestimate the impact these resolutions, as well as repeated appeals by the President for just and humane treatment for Baha'is, have had on Iran's official disposition toward the community. We need to sustain our vocal support for Baha'is in order to consolidate their recent advances in securing the most basic of rights in Iran.

What we seek for the Baha'i community is more than toleration of their right to life. We must urge Iran to respect the Baha'is right to practice their faith as a community. They must be allowed to meet as a community, in a place of worship, to profess their faith and to instruct their children in the principles of their devotion. They must be allowed to elect the leaders and maintain administrative offices of their faith. They must have access to institutes of higher education like any other Iranian.

We must communicate to the Government of Iran that Americans and, indeed, all of the ever-expanding free world, consider religious tolerance to be one of the cornerstones of a free society. If Iran is ever to enjoy truly normal relations with most of the free world, she will need to exhibit a far greater acceptance of religious freedom than has ever been the case in revolutionary Iran. A Baha'i, no less than any other human being, is entitled to the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. For Baha'is, as for many people, happiness is pursued through religious devotion. If the theocracy that rules Iran cannot find it in their hearts to recognize that faith, at least let them remove legal impediments and disincentives to its practice.

Mr. President, I support this resolution because I feel it necessary to repeatedly make clear to Iran that the United States takes very seriously religious intolerance wherever it is in evidence and cannot help but condition relations with any government on its treatment of religious minorities.

We seek no special treatment of Baha'is in Iran, only the protection under Iranian law of their right to worship God as their hearts command. While we are relieved that Baha'is need no longer sacrifice their lives for their faith, clearly, Iran has not permitted them this most basic right. Until they do, Mr. President, Congress must take every opportunity to make clear our solidarity with the Baha'i community of Iran.

WELCOMING THE PRESIDENT OF TUNISIA ON HIS FIRST STATE VISIT TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator BOSCHWITZ, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 284) welcoming the President of Tunisia on his first State visit to the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise, as I have on past occasions, to speak on behalf of Tunisia. Today, I am submitting a resolution welcoming His Excellency Zine el Abidine Ben Ali, President of Tunisia, on his first state visit to Washington. I hope that my colleagues will join me in cosponsoring this resolution of welcome.

As my colleagues in the Senate are aware, President Ben Ali assumed the Presidency in November 1987 in compliance with the Tunisian Constitution, when it became apparent that the failing health of then President Habib Bourguiba would prevent him from continuing his duties. Under the leadership of President Bourguiba, Tunisia had committed itself to a course of democracy and openness. Moreover, Tunisia has been a friend of the United States and shares our commitment to democratic principles. Tunisia is the most open and democratic state in the Arab world and has served as an example of tolerance for nearly 35 years.

Before Mr. Ben Ali assumed the Presidency, however, there was fear and uncertainty over what a transition of power would mean for democracy in Tunisia. Former President Bourguiba had been the only leader independent Tunisia had known. The mechanism for transferring power, an institution essential to the maintenance of democratic government, had never been tested. Now 2½ years later, those fears have been allayed. President Ben Ali has demonstrated that Tunisia remains committed to opening the democratic process in order to benefit the Tunisian people.

Immediately upon assuming office, President Ben Ali initiated political reforms to make the government more accessible. He cleared the way for other political parties to participate in the election process. He reduced the minimum age for serving in Parliament from 28 to 25. He introduced provisions limiting the President to two terms in office. In April 1989, free and open elections were held for the first time with a wide range of political parties participating. Most political parties have been legalized. Finally, thousands of political prisoners have been released and their civil rights restored in a general amnesty announced in 1989. Tunisia has demonstrated an unshakable commitment toward political freedom despite a significant antidemocratic religious minority.

Recognizing that political and economic reforms go hand in hand to ensure the well-being of a country, President Ben Ali has declared that Tunisia's national goals are self-sufficiency in food, a reduction in the external debt burden, and reduction in unemployment. President Ben Ali's government has instituted a major structural adjustment plan supported by the World Bank, the IMF and the United States. Tunisia has met or exceeded all the targets set up with the IMF. Yet Tunisia still faces economic challenges.

The lingering effects of a 2-year drought has reduced grain production in Tunisia by 85 percent, causing the government to spend more than 10 percent of its budget on unanticipated grain imports. This has resulted in a slowdown of economic growth. Despite this economic situation, Tunisia has met all its debt payments. Tunisia's total debt service to the United States Government is more than $100 million.

Tunisia is a lower middle income country poised on the edge of significant economic expansion. If Tunisia succeeds in having an economic takeoff, it will become a more significant player in the international market. If it fails, the democratic and liberal foundations of Tunisia could be in jeopardy.

Mr. President, the friends of Tunisia must assist President Ben Ali and the Tunisian people in achieving these goals. The United States, within the limits of its current budget constraints, should continue to provide consistent levels of economic assistance to meet these objectives. By doing so the United States will demonstrate its support for the emerging democracies of the world and reward a country which is promoting open and democratic ideals in a region of the world where such ideals are often lacking.

Mr. LEAHY. This resolution has been cleared on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution (S. Res. 284), with its preamble, is as follows:

S. RES. 284

Whereas the United States and the Republic of Tunisia share a common bond of friendship in the pursuit of democratic values;

Whereas the Government and the people of Tunisia share with the United States the ideals of freedom, peace, democracy, and progress;

Whereas the United States has recognized the peaceful succession of President Zine el Abidine Ben Ali and supports his commitment to and progress on Constitutional reforms and political democratization;

Whereas the United States applauds President Ben Ali's concern for human rights and political freedoms as demonstrated by the release of political detainees;

Whereas the United States supports President Ben Ali's economic adjustment programs and reforms which will enhance economic growth and result in social benefits for the people of Tunisia;

Whereas the United States values and respects Tunisia's role as leader in the Arab world and its moderating influence in the Maghreb which has significant benefits for mutual and shared strategic interests;

Whereas the United States commends the Government of Tunisia for its reestablishment of diplomatic relations with the Arab Republic of Egypt;

Whereas Tunisia has stood for peaceful settlement of regional conflicts and it was Tunisia that, in 1965, called for peaceful coexistence between the Arabs and Israelis;

Whereas the United States recognizes the importance of a strong and independent Tunisia: Now therefore be it Resolved:

SECTION. 1. Resolved by the Senate of the United States, that the Senate extends its warm greetings and respect to His Excellency, Zine el Abidine Ben Ali, the President of Tunisia on the occasion of his first State visit to the United States, with the hope that this visit will reaffirm the close and friendly ties between our two great nations.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to the President for transmission to the Government of Tunisia.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

COMMEMORATING THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NATIONAL SHERIFFS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 264, commemorating the 50th anniversary of the National Sheriffs' Association, and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 264) to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the National Sheriffs' Association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Their being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 264), with its preamble, is as follows:

S.J. RES. 264

Whereas the National Sheriffs' Association, incorporated on September 26, 1940, by the Secretary of State of the State of Ohio, is commemorating 50 years of service this year;

Whereas the purposes of the National Sheriffs' Association are to form and perpetuate an efficient organization of the sheriffs of the United States and to raise the level of professionalism in the office of sheriff and in sheriffs' deputies and other law enforcement professionals charged with or interested in the execution and enforcement of State and Federal laws;

Whereas the National Sheriffs' Association continues to provide professional law enforcement leadership in the areas of training and exchange of information pertaining to the duties, methods, and official practices of the members and to inform the members of all such matters that pertain to violation of law or injury to persons or property;

Whereas the National Sheriffs' Association has continued to foster cooperation among State sheriffs' associations and Federal, State, and municipal law enforcement organizations; and

Whereas the National Sheriffs' Association has continued to advocate and preserve legislation in harmony with the needs of enforcement officials and the safety of the public: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of June 24, 1990, through June 30, 1990, is designated as "National Sheriffs' Week" in honor of the 50th anniversary of the National Sheriffs' Association, and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to honor all sheriffs during the week for their outstanding efforts to preserve the peace and ensure domestic tranquility.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY, MAY 16, 1990

RECESS; MORNING BUSINESS; AND RESUME CONSIDERATION OF S. 2240

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 9:30 a.m., Wednesday, May 16; that, following the time for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business, not to extend beyond 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each; I further ask unanimous consent that following the swearing in of DANIEL K. AKAKA and various housekeeping resolutions, the Senate resume consideration of S. 2240, the AIDS C.A.R.E. bill, and when the Senate resumes the bill Senator HELMS be recognized to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I do not see anybody else seeking recognition. I do not know if the distinguished acting Republican leader seeks recognition for any purpose.

Mr. HELMS. I suggest we go home.

Mr. LEAHY. I always try, when I can, to follow the suggestions of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

So, Mr. President, if there is no further business and no Senator is seeking recognition, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess, under the previous order, until 9:30 a.m. Wednesday, May 16.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:50 p.m., recessed until Wednesday, May 16, 1990, at 9:30 a.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3910) "An act to require the Secretary of Education to conduct a comprehensive national assessment of programs carried out with assistance under chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965."

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1594) "An act to extend nondiscriminatory treatment to the products of the Peoples' Republic of Hungary for 3 years," and agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. PACKWOOD, and Mr. DOLE, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 2 to the bill (H.R. 1805) "An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to allow Federal annuitants to make contributions for health benefits through direct payments rather than through annuity withholdings if the annuity is insufficient to cover the required withholdings, and to make a technical correction relating to the life insurance program."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE EDWIN F. POWERS OF STAFF OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

(Mr. WHITTEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, in the operations of the Congress of the United States, and particularly the House, we are very fortunate on the Appropriations Committee in having what I consider as good a staff as we have in the country.

Mr. Mahon, and others who preceded me, let the staff select those who have worked on our staff. They are budget people without regard to politics.

I also think that we on the Committee on Appropriations have done everything that we could to be bipartisan. I think Members on both sides will agree with that.

One of those staff people was Edwin F. Powers of Texas, who served the committee for 17 years, brilliant, hard working, and sound.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I take this time to inform the House of the death of Mr. Ed Powers of the staff of the Committee on Appropriations. Ed died quietly in his sleep on Monday morning after a long bout with cancer. Unfortunately, his death came just 12 days after his 45th birthday.

Ed was born in McKinney, TX, on May 2, 1945, where he attended the public schools. He received his bachelor's degree from Austin College and has a master's degree from the University of Texas at Austin.

In 1969, Ed began his outstanding career of Government service by taking a job as a State budget officer for Gov. Preston Smith of Texas, where he served until April 1973, when he was hired by the Committee on Appropriations and assigned to the full committee staff. From 1980 to 1985, he was clerk of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee under the chairmanship of Dr. Long. In 1985, Ed came back to the front office where he worked on a number of appropriations and budget process issues.

We will always remember the professionalism that symbolized Ed's work. He was a true professional who loved his job and loved this institution that he served for over 17 years.

Our sympathies go out to his family and friends. We all share in this tragic loss.

May I say that he had a wonderful record with our committee, one that will be hard to surpass.

EDWIN F. POWERS

(Mr. CONTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives and the Committee on Appropriations lost a valued resource and a loyal staff member with the death yesterday morning of Edwin F. Powers. Ed died quietly in his sleep at the Washington Hospital Center after a 2-year battle with cancer.

Ed Powers joined the staff of the Committee on Appropriations in April 1973, under the chairmanship of George Mahon. He came to us with tough credentials, having worked previously on the State of Texas budget. He worked in the committee's main office until January 1980, when he became the clerk of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee. In January 1985, Ed returned to the main office.

Working with the chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, Clarence "Doc" Long of Maryland, Ed was instrumental in shaping our Nation's foreign economic and military assistance policies, especially in the volatile Central American region. I am told they named a school for Doc Long somewhere down there; they should name something for Ed Powers, too.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you and many in the leadership on both sides of the aisle are well aware of Ed's many contributions to the workings of the House. We need dedicated professionals to help make this place function, and Ed will be sorely missed.

I offer my condolences to Ed's two brothers and to his friends and colleagues.

RESIGNATION FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from the House of Representatives:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, May 15, 1990.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On May 16, 1990, I will take the oath of office as a United States Senator. I therefore announce my resignation from the House of Representatives effective 10 a.m. EDT, May 16, 1990. A copy of my letter of resignation to Governor Waihee is enclosed.

It has been a distinct honor to serve with you and our fellow House colleagues for the past 13 years. While I am eager to take on new challenges in the Senate, I will always cherish my years in the House.

Best wishes for your continued success as Speaker of the House.

Aloha pumehana,

DANIEL K. AKAKA,
Member of Congress.

Enclosure.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, May 15, 1990.

Hon. JOHN D. WAIHEE, III,
Governor of Hawaii, State Capital, Honolulu, HI.

DEAR GOVERNOR WAIHEE: For the past 13 years, I have had the honor of representing the people of the Second Congressional District of Hawaii in the U.S. House of Representatives. This service has been one of the most rewarding experiences of my life.

Your decision to appoint me to the vacancy created by the death of Senator Spark Matsunaga gives me the opportunity to serve all the people of Hawaii as a United States Senator. I welcome this new challenge and will dedicate myself to satisfying this responsibility.

I therefore announce my resignation from the House of Representatives, effective 10 a.m. EDT, May 16, 1990, so that I may be sworn in as a United States Senator.

Aloha pumehana,

DANIEL K. AKAKA,
Member of Congress.

REPRESENTATIVE AKAKA BIDS ALOHA TO THE HOUSE

(Mr. AKAKA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I have come today to bid aloha to my friends and colleagues. For almost 14 years, I have had the privilege of representing the people of Hawaii in the House. My service here has been one of the most rewarding experiences of my life, and I thank my constituents for enabling me to serve in this honored body.

Tomorrow morning I will be sworn in as a Member of the U.S. Senate. I welcome the challenge. I welcome the new opportunity to serve the people of Hawaii and our Nation.

While the future holds bright promise for me, I will always cherish my years in the House. I take with me the wisdom and experience gained as a Member of Congress, and the reward of having served with men and women of great vision who are dedicated to our great Nation.

As I was growing up in Pauoa, my parents taught me the importance of hard work and achievement. They also encouraged me to dream, and convinced me that I could make a difference. I know of no higher fulfillment of their wish for me, no better manifestation of the American dream, and no greater honor that can be accorded any citizen, than to serve in the U.S. Congress.

For so many years, you have been generous to the people of Hawaii and kind to me. Millie and I are especially grateful for all the dear friends we have made over the past 13 years. Words cannot express the aloha we feel for all the love and support you have given to us. On behalf of the Akaka family and staff, I thank you for your generosity and support. Aloha. God bless you. God bless America.

CUBA

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that one of our closest allies is cooperating closely with Fidel Castro's Cuba. This country has steadily increased its trade with Cuba since 1983 to the point where it has become Cuba's largest non-Communist trading partner. Who is this country?

Mr. Speaker, the country I am talking about is Japan. This fact is amazing to me. When communism is collapsing around the world and freedom is breaking out in Central and Eastern Europe, one of our closest allies is helping to subsidize a repressive Communist dictator.

It was estimated in 1986 that Cuba's debt with Japan was $850 million and rising. It is undoubtedly over $1 billion today. In addition, Cuban exports to Japan have also increased, especially in the areas of sugar and seafood. Since most of Cuba's trade with Japan is conducted on a barter basis, the trade deficit represents goods purchased on credit, which actually amount to a massive loan.

Mr. Speaker, this trade is appalling. When we are being encouraged to give Japan the benefit of the doubt on some of its trade practices, they are in turn trading with one of our most implacable enemies. United States territories such as the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico are large sugar producers who could benefit from selling their sugar to Japan. Japan needs to hear the message loud and clear that many of us will take a second look at their trade practices if they continue to trade with Cuba.

CITIZENS DEMOCRACY CORPS GOOD FOR EAST AND WEST

(Mr. GEPHARDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, in a speech over the weekend, the President endorsed what he called a citizens democracy corps to help the new democracies of Eastern Europe.

Thanks to the leadership and hard work of LEE HAMILTON and DANTE FASCELL over the many months, the House will soon have the chance to approve two programs in line with the President's goals.

The first, the "Free Enterprise Corps," will help experienced Americans with roots in Eastern Europe to share their time, energy, and knowledge with those countries as pioneers for free enterprise.

The second, "Freedom International," is a modern-day version of the Berlin airlift. But instead of shipping food and clothing from West to East, Freedom International will enrich both sides of the Atlantic through educational, cultural, and scientific exchanges on an unprecedented scale.

Eastern Europe has much to learn from America's rich tradition of freedom, pluralism, and opportunity. But we have much to learn from them—about risking it all for principles, about paying the price for freedom, and about remembering how precious the democracy we take for granted really is.

So I applaud the President's words. We need to build new friendships and new markets in Eastern Europe. Not only because strong, stable democracies are good for them. But because they're good for us as well.

NATION'S EMPLOYERS UNDER ATTACK

(Mr. HANCOCK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, employers in this Nation are under attack. From the mandated increase in the minimum wage, to the mandated parental leave bill, to the clean air bill, to the Americans With Disabilities Act, the employer is being confronted with the stark reality of the 1990's—that is, if the liberals cannot get the Government to fund their new programs—they will require businesses to fund them.

Does the Democrat leadership not expect these mandates to have a detrimental effect on the strength of this country? What about the jobs that will be lost? What about the factories or small family-owned businesses that may be forced to close? What about the costs that will inevitably be passed on to all consumers? And what about inflation?

I cannot be an accomplice to the demise of American productivity. I will not support the liberals' mandates.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote against the rule on the ADA it if does not allow for a clean vote on amendments that provide employers flexibility and assistance in meeting these anticonsumer and anticompetitive mandates.

AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, this week we will take another step to bring 43 million disabled Americans into the mainstream of our society by passing the Americans With Disabilities Act.

The ADA will not just help the disabled. It will help everyone, by giving America's economy the full benefit of their productive energies and talents.

Some people are afraid of this bill because it may mean they have to treat disabled Americans fairly in hiring and public accommodations. Some are afraid of the costs, or the prospect of lawsuits.

They should know that Washington State has had a stronger civil rights law for the disabled for the past 10 years. It works well. It has not caused one single business to fail. It has been good for business, good for public transportation, good for communities.

Mr. Speaker, we all know people with disabilities who perform in demanding jobs, bringing their talents and energies to make our economy and our society work better. We know that minimal adjustments are sometimes needed to allow them to make their greatest contributions, and we know the rewards are well worth the investments. Let us pass the ADA this week and bring 43 million Americans to the full citizenship and participation they deserve.

THOSE AMERICAN BASES IN THE PHILIPPINES

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, more Americans are killed in the Philippines, and the Philippine Government does nothing. No one is apprehended nor punished. There is nothing new in that.

I have a question: we have 40,000 Americans in the Philippines to protect the Philippines. Protect the Philippines from who? If the American people ever get the truth about the hundreds of millions, the billions we are pumping into the Philippines to keep these unneeded bases, they are going to be totally outraged and totally incensed. The Philippine people do not want nor need the bases. The American people do not want nor need the bases.

It is time to live in the 21st century. It is time to save billions. It is time to start a new page in history. It is time to do the will of the people. It is time to close the bases in the Philippines.

THE REALITY OF THE BUDGET, TAXES, AND SPENDING CUTS

(Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reality is knocking at the front door of the White House. This intrusion in a fiscal policy dreamland comes from radically bloated budget deficit projections, a result in part from a softening economy, and in part from the exploding cost of the savings and loan industry scandal that has rocked this country.

The talk now of budget deficit summits, taxes, and spending cuts is a grim reminder of both a fiscal policy desperately off track and, in the case of the savings and loan industry mess, of an administration that failed to govern effectively resulting in perhaps the costliest financial failure in the history of America.

Those who assumed their posts in the Reagan administration during the 1980's, and who were part of the team to "get government off America's back," created a type of economic casino in which the fat cats were gorging, playing their speculative games while the American taxpayers were being set up to pay for the losses.

If ever there's a lesson describing the need for careful government regulation in sensitive industries such as financial industries, that lesson came from the incompetence of the 1980's when the American people were stolen blind and a good number of the so-called regulators were driving the getaway car.

The cost of the savings and loan industry bailout is now estimated by some to be over $300 billion. Is it any wonder that the President and others have finally decided it is now time for some sober discussion about how to fix this country's fiscal policy mess? Let us hope it is not too late, and let us hope as we fix this mess, we prevent the savings and loan bailout scandal and others like it from ever occurring again.

OVERALL GOAL OF LIMITING SPECIAL INTERESTS

(Mr. WALSH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, the preamble of our Constitution begins with the following three words, "We the people * * *."

It does not begin with, "We the national federation of * * *."

It does not begin with, "We the American association of * * *."

It does not begin with, "We the union of amalgamated * * *."

It simply reads, "We the people * * *."

We have been charged by our constituents through their votes, to represent their concerns and interests, and to do the business of this Nation.

However, the American people have come to believe that special interests have replaced their interests. That any influence that they might have had in the voting booth is lost at political fund raisers.

A former Democratic colleague was quoted in the book, "Honest Graft," as saying, with respect to the current state of campaign financing, and I quote, "The process buys you out."

I am aware of the fact that it takes more than a firm handshake and a nice smile to mount an effective campaign. But we must begin the necessary dialog between the respective parties to correct the problems affecting the system.

Effective campaign reform must remove any semblance of impropriety by those who currently serve, and provide a competitive environment for those who seek to serve in this body.

I believe the American people want reform now.

"LIPSERVICE" TERMED A DISSERVICE

(Mr. VISCLOSKY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, it used to be that we only had one pair of lips to read.

Now, with the budget summit, there are so many lips—I don't know whose to read.

President Bush says: "There are no preconditions, and that's the way it is."

Then, a "senior White House official" says: "I emphasize it is our prerogative to say no—I emphasize that no."

Then, the President's press secretary says: "The 'senior White House official' is 'crazy.'"

Then, the Vice President says: "The 'senior White House official' * * * was just reflecting the President's instincts."

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, this lipservice is a disservice to the American people.

JAPANESE TRADE WITH CUBA

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to attention the increased contact between Communist Cuba and Japan. In January of this year, Fidel Castro made an appeal to the Japanese Ambassador to encourage investment and economic aid to Cuba, and just 2 months ago, Castro attended a Japanese Embassy dinner with the same objective.

Since 1983, Japan has become Cuba's largest non-Communist trading partner. Machinery, spare parts, electrical equipment, and vehicles are shipped on a regular basis from Japan to Cuba, and Cuba in turn sells seafood and sugar to Japan.

Even though the Soviets are cutting major subsidies to Cuba, Japan is increasing its trade with this Communist regime which does not value even the most fundamental human rights.

Supplying Castro with the currency and goods for his corrupt regime undermines the efforts of the United States to bring pressure on Cuba's bankrupt economy. Let us bring this issue to light now so that Japan can cut its ties to Fidel Castro.

BUDGET PROCESS REFORM—POLITICAL SMOKESCREEN

(Mr. FROST asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I have noticed with great interest Republican calls for changes in the budget process as part of the budget summit that begins today. I served on the Budget Committee from 1983 to 1989 and was a conferee on the Gramm-Rudman law. Also, I serve on the House Rules Committee which has original jurisdiction over changes in the Budget Act. So, this is a subject I've had a little experience with, and I'd like to share a few thoughts about it.

This call for change in the budget process is no more than the usual Republican smokescreen. Whenever Republicans don't really want to make the tough choices to cut the deficit, they cop-out and call for changes in the process. It's a lot easier than actually reducing the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, the American people are fed up with budget gimmicks. They want actual deficit reduction. Let's get off this tired old horse of changing the rules and get down to the hard work of making real choices.

This latest effort is just one more chapter in 10 years of Republican smoke and mirrors. The American people are tired of it and deserve better.

TAX AMNESTY

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have underscored, the budget summit has begun. It is very important that we see some kind of agreement addressed as we face the challenge of ensuring that we do not pass on this horrendous debt to future generations.

We all know it is very important for us to find ways in which we can increase revenues and enhance revenues to the Treasury.

Two weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I offered legislation which I believe could take a very bold and dynamic step toward doing just that, and that is bringing about a tax amnesty, a 3-month period beginning July 1 of next year whereby we could collect some of the $100 billion in uncollected taxes out there which have been legally earned.

I hope very much that as the summit proceeds the process of tax amnesty will be seriously considered.

ECONOMIC CHANGES AFFECTING THE BUDGET SUMMIT

(Mr. SABO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, the President has called a budget summit. He tells us that the economy has changed dramatically since he sent us his budget in January. In fact, he says the economy is changing so much that it is putting us on the brink of budget chaos.

But what's changed, Mr. President?

The "Blue Chip" economic forecasters tell us that the economy has gotten better—not worse—since January. If anything, it appears that changes in the economy will help reduce the deficit—not increase it.

So, Mr. President, why are you predicting an economic crisis now?

Mr. President, is this crisis manufactured because you are now concerned about the way you've been cooking the books?

Or is there something your experts know that we in Congress and private economists don't?

We need to know the answer, Mr. President. I don't see a sudden economic crisis. So the American people need to know from you, Mr. President, what's changed?

Mr. WALKER. Regular order. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). The Chair will advise Members they should address the Chair and not the President.

(Mr. SHAW asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, as changes continue to unfold in Europe, and we continue to see great strides toward freedom and democracy, we are excited about the possibilities of a unified democratic Europe. However, as recent events in France show, sometimes you must take one step back in order to take two steps forward.

In a small town in the south of France last week, a Jewish cemetery was desecrated. Tombstones were knocked over, a woman's body was partially pulled from her grave, and the desecrated body of another man, who had recently passed away, was found draped over a tombstone.

This incident is not an isolated case. Attacks against Jews and other ethnic groups have been widely reported across Europe. So, while Europe continues to make great strides in its move to freedom, we must be careful to guard against unexpected pitfalls, such as the surfacing of ethnic hatreds that have built up over centuries. I applaud yesterday's march by French President Mitterrand and the French people in showing their outrage over this incident.

Such goulish incidious acts cannot be tolerated by a civilized society.

ADMINISTRATION'S FAILED ECONOMIC POLICIES

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this is a very sad time. The chickens have come home to roost in the United States; 10 years' worth of a very failed policy. It has failed because it has made the United States unable to compete, buried it in debt and made it the biggest debtor Nation ever in the course of history.

But it has been successful because it has completely turned around the problems that we have to face. From being able to address all of the pressing needs of the day we are constantly now having to address the problems that the deficit brings.

We have a very strong military—fine. But everything else in this country is falling apart. The infrastructure, the social structure, everything that this country holds dear is underfunded, undercapable, and under assault.

Mr. President, your part of a 10-year——

Mr. WALKER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will advise Members they should address the Chair and not the President.

The gentleman from Florida may proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the President is at fault. He is part of this team which has done this to us.

It is time for him to come to grips with reality. It is time for him to take responsibility for the mess this country is in.

BALTIC FREEDOM

(Mr. LEACH of Iowa asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, even as Mikhail Gorbachev has issued a Presidential decree asserting that the Baltic people's aspirations for self-determination are constrained by Soviet law and the Soviet constitution, news reports this morning indicate that leaflets have been dropped in the Latvian capital of Riga, urging Soviet citizens to leave work, to take to the streets, and defend Soviet power against the counterrevolution.

Let us be precise about what is revolutionary and what is counterrevolutionary.

It is revolutionary to assert—as the citizens of the Baltics are peacefully and properly doing—that Governments derive their powers from the consent from the governed, and that freedom is an inalienable right springing from the people.

It is counterrevolutionary to suggest that freedom is a right granted and thus removable by law and that a foreign leader has the right to stifle legitimate aspirations for self-determination.

Neither the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact nor the de facto genocide implicit in the Stalinist deportation of up to 20 percent of the Baltic population to the gulag gives the Soviets any historical legitimacy to their claim to the Baltics.

While the United States does not visualize the Baltic States to be part of a cold war equation, we do hold that individual peoples have inalienable rights that deserve being respected. If they are not, the U.S. Congress cannot be expected to sanction civilized discourse with an uncivilized nation.

Gorbachev must, therefore, come to understand that new Muscovite coercion in the Baltics will, at a minimum, make less likely the kind of progressive financial and trade ties with the West that Russia's moribund economy so desperately requires.

The West may have ruled out intervention—this being a crisis neither conjured nor inspired from Washington—but it cannot allow freedom's bell to be silenced without a telling response.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4151, HUMAN SERVICES REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1990

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 101-486) on the resolution (H. Res. 392) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4151) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1991 through 1994 to carry out the Head Start Act, the Follow Through Act, the Community Services Block Grant Act, and the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

A SPECIAL DAY OF REMEMBRANCE FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT HEROES

(Mr. BRENNAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, today we pause and remember the 151 law enforcement officers in this Nation who made the supreme sacrifice in the past year. It is appropriate that we as a grateful Nation, take time to express our deep gratitude for these brave individuals who gave their lives to protect us.

At a time when drug-related violence sweeps our Nation, we must always remember those who serve on the front lines of this serious battle—our law enforcement officers.

Today, my home State of Maine offers deep appreciation and remembrance for an outstanding police officer, Giles R. Landry, detective with the Maine State Police, who lost his life in March 1989, in the line of duty. Over the years more than 60 law enforcement officers in Maine have made the ultimate sacrifice for their fellow citizens.

Today, I want to give my thanks to our law enforcement officers on this special day of remembrance.

JAPAN IS BANKROLLING AND UNDERWRITING THE CASTRO REGIME IN CUBA

(Mr. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, last year was truly the year of democracy all over the world. This year has continued the process, with only one exception in our entire hemisphere, the little island nation of Cuba, which remains the only military dictatorship in our hemisphere.

Who is our biggest problem in terms of trade with Cuba? It is Japan, the largest creditor for Cuba. The largest trading partner with Cuba in the non-Communist bloc is Japan.

It is hard to believe, at a time when the Soviet Union will be cutting back on its foreign commitments, Japan, our so-called trading partner, is bankrolling and underwriting the Castro regime.

I think it is high time that we reassess our whole trade negotiation with Japan until they recognize that their funding and credits and trade with Cuba are running against the democratic trend all over the world and especially in our hemisphere.

THE PHILIPPINES ARE KILLING AMERICANS

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the Philippines are killing Americans. Their leaders say, and I quote, "Americans must be driven out and those Americans who refuse must be buried here."

Meanwhile, some other Philippine politicians are offering us a deal. They are saying, "Look, restore those $96 million in cuts you made, Congress, and give us a billion dollars more for our bases."

Now isn't that just ducky? I say it is time for the Philippines to go bankrupt, and it is also time for Congress to tell the Philippines if they kill one more American the Marines are going to make a house call. And we do not build fighter jets around here to arm the Salvation Army.

The joy ride is over. We gave them billions of dollars, and we have an ingrate who is out of control.

THE DEMOCRATS WANT TO RAISE AMERICA'S TAXES

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the Democrats want to raise America's taxes. Let me repeat that: The Democrats want to raise America's taxes.

The Democrats are pushing President Bush to raise America's taxes. They will tell America that we have not been getting enough in tax revenues to run this country; but the fact of the matter is for the past 10 years the average increase in tax revenue has been $56 billion a year.

Now listen to that, we have had an average increase in revenues of $56 billion a year over the past 10 years, but they say it is not enough. They want more taxes, and they are pushing the President to do it.

Mr. Speaker, the deficit lies not in the stars or with the lack of revenues, it lies with my Democratic friends, it lies with you.

AMERICANS NEED TO KNOW HOW THE PRESIDENT PROPOSES TO SOLVE THE $70 BILLION DEFICIT

(Mr. SLATTERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, in January of this year when the President submitted his budget to the U.S. Congress, he thought that he could reach the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction target of $64 billion a year with a simple $36 billion reduction in the deficit.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the $36 billion is not going to work; it is going to take probably $70 billion if not more to solve the problem.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the people of this country have a fundamental right to expect their President to lead in this situation. We need to know how the President proposes to solve this problem.

Does he propose to raise more revenues than he recommended earlier this year in his budget when he asked for $13.9 billion in additional revenue?

Does he now propose to cut the Pentagon budget more? Maybe he is ready to terminate the B-2 bomber program.

What other budget cuts does the President propose to reach the $70 billion under Gramm-Rudman?

Mr. Speaker, we only elect one President; he is the only person elected by all the people in this country. When this country needs leadership, it has always looked to the President.

So now, Mr. Speaker, is the time for the President of the United States to tell the American people how he proposes to solve this deficit problem. With his leadership I am convinced the American public is ready to respond and make the sacrifices necessary to solve this problem.

AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

(Mr. DELAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, the Americans With Disabilities Act will be considered on the House floor this week. One issue that has not yet been adequately considered in any committee, is the issue of providing tax assistance for businesses who will be required to make accommodations under the bill.

Mandating access for the disabled may be a reasonable requirement. Mandating that a business spend money to provide that access is something different. But to leave the spending mandate open-ended—with the courts determining how much small businesses must spend to accommodate the disabled—is unheard of.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress cannot pass the ADA unless it also allows for a tax credit for businesses who will be forced to spend money on accommodations for the disabled. The future of America's competitiveness is at stake.

THE BUDGET SUMMIT

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, today we go to the summit, and I hear people on the other side saying those of us on this side have no proposal except taxes.

Wrong. Those of us on this side have been very concerned about how the prior administration allowed this whole S&L thing to get totally out of whack. That is one of the main things driving this summit. They tried to take the S&L bailout and move it off budget. It did not make any difference whether it was on budget or off budget, you still got to pay.

So guess what? The debt is higher. Now, we have an Attorney General who is able to send his people out to find the assets of the drug cartels, but they are not able to find the assets of the S&L cartel because, thank you very much, they don't do white-collar crime. Well, they are supposed to do white-collar crime, and I think it is about time we start going to look for those assets. If we can find those assets, we can certainly do an awful lot about getting this deficit under control, by getting the cost of the S&L bailout down.

It makes no difference, that is what we ought to do. The Attorney General ought to get on with it.

REFORMULATED GASOLINE

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the oil industry recently decided to spend up to $2 million to oppose an amendment that I will be offering with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] during floor consideration of the Clean Air Act.

What is it that the oil industry fears? Quite simply, an amendment that will get substantial health and clean air benefits, by cleaning up our Nation's gasoline and by using ethanol.

Mr. Speaker, by replacing aromatics with oxygenated fuels, the Richardson-Madigan amendment will properly result in cleaner car engines, longer lasting cars, and thus can only be characterized as a strong consumer amendment. It will be the environmental amendment of the clean air debate.

Mr. Speaker, the Richardson-Madigan amendment on reformulated gas is good for our health, good for clean air, good for our economy by reducing our dependence on foreign oil. Beware of those slick ads by the oil industry about the Congress becoming engineers. The Congress is voting for a clean air bill and reformulated gas is a key in this bill.

PROJECT HEAD START'S 25TH ANNIVERSARY

(Mr. CLARKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, on Friday our Nation will celebrate the 25th anniversary of President Johnson's signing of the Executive order launching project Head Start.

Head Start was founded as a service to help prepare disadvantaged preschool children to start the first grade on an equal footing with their peers. Today, Head Start serves 451,000 children in more than 1,200 communities. Since its founding Head Start has served over 11 million children.

Research has shown that Head Start graduates have better attendance, miss fewer tests, need special education less, and have a lower dropout rate. The program has been so successful that the child-care bill passed by the House last month would expand Head Start to a full-day, year-round program.

In 1965, President Johnson said, "* * * we (have) opened a new war front on poverty. We set out to make certain that poverty's children would not be forevermore poverty's captives." Head Start is one program that has lived up to its promise.

On Thursday the House will consider legislation to reauthorize the Head Start Program through fiscal year 1994. This legislation deserves our strong support.

TRIBUTE TO PROFESSIONAL LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS

(Mr. HUGHES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the more than half a million dedicated and professional law enforcement officers in this country—at the local, State, and Federal levels—men and women who risk their lives every day in the course of their duties.

It is particularly appropriate to acknowledge these dedicated public servants today—on National Peace Officers Memorial Day. Today, as part of the National Police Week observances, the Fraternal Order of Police will be conducting a special service in honor of the 161 law enforcement officers who were killed in the line of duty during 1989. The families of these officers will be gathering on the Mall, with officers from all over the country, to pay homage to these heroes.

In addition, just a few blocks from this Chamber in Judiciary Square, work is proceeding on the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial. That memorial to the thousands of law enforcement officers who have given their lives in the course of duty will be completed and dedicated 1 year from now.

Mr. Speaker, we all hear a great deal and certainly talk a lot about the war on crime and drugs. But we do not take enough time to think about and acknowledge the service and sacrifice of the men and women who are on the front lines and in the trenches of that battle. Today and all this week we should all make an extra efforts to do just that.

TAXPAYER MONEY SQUANDERED ON ACID RAIN STUDY

(Mr. APPLEGATE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers of this country are going to be mad as hell when they find out how the Congress and the President of the United States are squandering $600 million of their tax dollars for an acid rain study that began in 1980, and is now being disregarded—$600 million—because of pressure from the environmentalists, from the Canadians, from the western coal interests, and from other special interests.

The reason for this study was to find the cause and the effect of acid rain. At the time that it started, the environmentalists were the strong supporters of it. But now it is not saying what they want it to say, they are opposing it. They do not give a damn about the economy as long as they get what they want. It does not make sense. Congress and the White House are playing a very stupid game in this. They do not know and do not realize they are elected by the people, not decorated by the special interests and the environmentalists.

INVESTMENT IN THE DELTA REGION PROMISES RICH DIVIDENDS

(Mr. POSHARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, this is an important day for rural America.

The Mississippi Delta Development Commission releases its report today on the problems and promise of the delta region, from southern Illinois to the Gulf of Mexico.

It lays the foundation for progress on some compelling challenges.

Our literacy rate is too low—the number of teenagers having babies is too high—health care is often hard to find or afford—and our people are caught in the middle.

But this area is worth helping.

It is rich in natural resources—it is poised to serve as an industrial, agricultural, and tourism hub for the country—and its people are willing to work hard to make it happen.

Join us in investing in the delta region. Your return will be greater than you may have ever imagined.

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE

(Mr. DINGELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, President Mikhail Gorbachev's reforms have brought about a series of changes in Eastern Europe unimaginable only a few years ago. In Poland, in Hungary, in Czechoslovakia, in Romania, in Bulgaria, and in East Germany, totalitarian rule is fast being replaced by governments of the people, for the people.

To Lithuania's exercise of freedom and independence, the Soviet Union has responded by banning privately owned weapons, tightening border controls, and imposing a crippling embargo against the Lithuanian people. President Gorbachev, the champion of perestroika and glasnost, stood idly by as Soviet troops stormed a printing plant in Vilnius, beating those who resisted.

In spite of all this, the Lithuanians are willing to negotiate on some of the most important points of contention, including the protection of Soviet citizens in Lithuania and a joint defense agreement. They will not, however, concede their independence and sovereignty.

In 1975, both the Soviet Union and the United States promised that the right of people to self-determination would be respected. The Soviets now will not recognize the rights of an independent Lithuania and President Bush has not come to Lithuania's defense. While Gorbachev has cut back drastically on basic supplies going into Lithuania, President Bush talks of a new United States-Soviet trade agreement.

Despite the possible advantages of a summit agreement on trade and other issues, President Bush must make the Soviets realize that the independence of the Baltic States is important to the Congress and the American people.

If the Soviet Government employs force and violence to stifle the aspirations of the people of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, it will make measurably harder the mutually desired improvement in relations between our two governments.

Before President Bush meets with Gorbachev later this month, he must demand that the Soviet Union makes a commitment to respect and honor Lithuanian rights. It is in the best interest of the Lithuanians, the United States, the Soviets, and world peace that the legitimate desire of the Baltic States for freedom and self-determination be honored. Their freedom must not be used as a bargaining chip at the tables of the next summit.

REASSESSING BLAME FOR THE SAVINGS AND LOAN CRISIS

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, there was an attempt to rewrite history on the floor here a few moments ago, and I thought that it deserved comment. A few moments ago we heard a Member come to the floor and suggest that it was the past administration that brought this Nation to the problem of the savings and loan crisis.

I would remind that Member that it was the enforcement officials of the past administration that attempted to do something about the savings and loan crisis before it became a national financial tragedy, but it was the Speaker of this House that got in the way, it was the former chairman of the Banking Committee of this House that got in the way, and it was leading Democrats on the other side of the Hill who got in the way of those enforcement officials doing their job.

We are faced with a multibillion dollar problem as a result of the special interests who helped Members of Congress get in the way of enforcement officials, but we ought not blame the savings and loan crisis on the past administration.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken after debate has concluded on all motions to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the floor legislation that will help to ensure that our financial markets are not destabilized by uncertainties in the application of the Bankruptcy Code. H.R. 4612 deals with the treatment under the Bankruptcy Code of two types of financial instruments which are traded in United States and international markets. One type of financial instrument is a forward contract, sometimes referred to as a futures contract. The other type of financial instrument is a swap agreement, which, for example, allows a corporation or other large borrower to exchange a variable interest rate for a fixed interest rate, to ensure stability of financial costs in his business.

The 1978 Bankruptcy Code is premised on the principle of uniform application wherever possible, so that all creditors receive equal treatment and no one is able to get a better deal for himself at the expense of the others. However, since 1978, we have been faced with a number of situations where Congress has concluded that certain rapid, high-volume financial transactions warrant special bankruptcy treatment so as not to disrupt international capital markets.

Thus, in recent years, Congress has given such special treatment to various financial instruments meeting this description, such as securities contracts, forward contracts, and repurchasing agreements. The justification for excluding such agreements from the usual powers of the trustee is that unlike other types of contracts, these agreements are tied to a host of other past and future transactions in the marketplace—all of which may be affected by the Bankruptcy Code's treatment of the specific agreement in question. The potential for confusion and disruption in the capital markets is thus great.

We have sought out all interested parties and have found consensus on the need to provide swap agreements with similar treatment. We have also found consensus on the need to refine certain definitions in the existing Bankruptcy Code provisions which already provide forward contracts with this treatment so as to cover the types of forward contracts and payments now in use in the markets.

I would like to note a few technical changes made to H.R. 4612 since it was reported by the Judiciary Committee. The definition of "swap participant" was modified to remove an ambiguity that might have led courts to disregard all swap agreements entered into on the day of, but prior to, a bankruptcy petition being filed. The term "swap agreement" was clarified to include "commodity swaps" among the various types of agreements within the meaning of this term. The terms "repurchase agreement" and "reverse repurchase agreement," which are used in the forward contract title of the bill, are already used elsewhere in the Bankruptcy Code for other purposes, so the word "agreement" was changed to "transaction" to distinguish the new terms and eliminate possible confusion.

I want to particularly thank Congressmen SCHUMER, FISH, and SYNAR for their significant contributions in fashioning this measure.

Mr. Speaker, the swap and forward contract markets can be volatile enough as it is. This bill will remove the increased volatile capability that results from a bankruptcy's potential to disrupt the settling of accounts in these markets.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in support of H.R. 4612—legislation that incorporates the provisions of two earlier bankruptcy bills—H.R. 2057 on swap agreements and H.R. 1754 on forward contracts. H.R. 2057 is a bill Mr. SCHUMER introduced with Mr. SYNAR's and my cosponsorship—and H.R. 1754 is a bill I introduced with Mr. SCHUMER's and Mr. SYNAR's cosponsorship.

During our hearing in the Subcommittee on Economic and Commercial Law, I raised the issue of whether these two bills should be merged. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS.], recognized the need for comparable bankruptcy treatment of swap agreements and forward contracts—and introduced a single bill. I commend him for his interest and leadership in this matter.

The prospect of favorable action in this body on needed bankruptcy legislation covering swap agreements and forward contracts is particularly gratifying to me because I have been seeking—for some time—to reduce risks for participants in these transactions.

Today, the many financial institutions that engage in exchanges of currencies and interest rates under swap agreements face needless uncertainty about the potential impact of a bankruptcy filing on the right to terminate and net out transactions. The stability of the swap market depends on the ability of a nondefaulting participant to terminate outstanding transactions quickly; rapid changes in currency values and interest rates can make delay very costly. In addition, fairness requires offsetting favorable transactions against unfavorable transactions and protecting payments made pursuant to swap agreements against the possible exercise of avoiding powers to set aside prebankruptcy transfers.

The swap market serves essential functions today—including reducing vulnerability to fluctuations in exchange and interest rates. Explicit Bankruptcy Code references to swap agreements will remove ambiguities that undermine the swap market. The legislation is consistent with prior congressional action incorporating similar Bankruptcy Code provisions on securities contracts and repurchase agreements.

Our hearing record—including testimony on behalf of the International Swap Dealers Association and correspondence from the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System—documents the need for swap legislation. The Senate passed a bankruptcy bill relating to swap agreements in the 100th Congress.

The legislation before us includes, as I have indicated, the provisions of my bill relating to the treatment of forward contracts—deferred delivery contracts for the "purchase, sale, or transfer of a commodity." We clarify the forward contract definition already in the code and provide greater assurance that the basic expectations of participants in such contracts will not be thwarted. The language on forward contracts does not establish a new statutory scheme, but rather eliminates unsettling ambiguities from an existing one.

The forward contract definition in current bankruptcy law does not include a list of specific types of covered transactions, although there is legislative history clarifying Congress' intent. A 1983 Senate Judiciary Committee report points out that "[t]he terms 'purchase,' 'sale' and 'transfer' are used in the definition in their broadest sense to include, at least, consignments, leases, swaps, hedge transactions, commercial options, deposits, loans, allocated and unallocated transactions, or any combination thereof." (Rept. 98-65, p.70)

The congressional understanding that Bankruptcy Code provisions protecting forward contracts apply to repurchase agreements—and reverse repurchase agreements—also finds expression in the same legislative history. The committee report notes: "It is not intended by the enumeration in this definition [of repurchase agreement] to affect in any way the status of repurchase agreements for any item, whether or not covered by the definition, under other provisions of the Code, such as those, for example, protecting securities contracts and forward contracts." (Rept. 98-65, p. 70.)

Section 201 of H.R. 4612 incorporates into statutory language a nonexclusive list of covered transactions that tracks Congress' original intent as expressed in the Senate committee report—except for broader language on options in the pending legislation. Such a codification provides enhanced protection to forward contract participants by removing uncertainties surrounding the extent of judicial reliance on legislative history from the 98th Congress.

The list of covered transactions in H.R. 4612 includes "repurchase transaction[s]" and "reverse repurchase transaction[s]." We have modified the "repurchase agreement" and "reverse repurchase agreement" terminology that appeared in earlier versions of this legislation because we recognize that the Bankruptcy Code definition of these terms is too narrow for our purposes. The limiting references in section 101(41) to transactions involving specific types of securities are inconsistent with our objective of codifying coverage of repurchase agreements and reverse repurchase agreements involving commodities.

We use distinguishing terminology to clarify that the language of section 101(41) does not apply. Our intent is to embrace—for purposes of the forward contract definition—repurchase transactions and reverse repurchase transactions as understood by participants in the forward contract market.

The Committee on the Judiciary acted favorably on this legislation by voice vote with no expression of opposition. I urge my colleagues in this body to join me in supporting H.R. 4612.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER], the distinguished coauthor of the bill.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, first let me rise in strong support of H.R. 4612, a bill amending the treatment of swap agreements and forward contracts under the Bankruptcy Code. The committee has done an excellent job by taking legislation that I introduced and another key bill that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] introduced and consolidating, improving, and putting them together in this product which we hope will become law.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Chairman BROOKS and the staff of the Committee on the Judiciary for their diligent work on a subject which, while important, is more than a bit esoteric. This legislation consolidates and improves on two separate pieces of legislation previously introduced by myself and my colleague from New York, Mr. FISH.

Under the general provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, all contracts, obligations and agreements involving the bankrupt entity are stayed or frozen until such time as the competing claims are reconciled. This process typically can take months, during which the ultimate outcome is totally uncertain. This approach is appropriate for nonliquid contracts such as a building lease or service agreement, since those agreements do not typically change in value substantially over time.

However, high volume, transactional agreements and contracts are of a different character and deserve different treatment under the code. Instruments that are actively traded on the international capital markets fluctuate constantly in value. Counterparties to a bankrupt entity need immediate resolution of their claims in order to be able to hedge their positions in the increasingly volatile international capital markets. If the stay provisions are allowed to take effect, counterparties will be frozen and unable to participate in the markets.

Recognizing the different character of these instruments, Congress has previously placed high volume financial transaction instruments such as securities contracts, options, and repurchase agreements in a separate category under the Bankruptcy Code. When a bankruptcy occurs, these exposures are settled immediately, ensuring crucial liquidity remains in the markets.

America's capital markets are the most innovative in the world and that makes them the most competitive and successful internationally. Unfortunately, that innovation also brings with it an incredible proliferation of new instruments which the law cannot foresee. Forward contracts and swap agreements—the subject of the legislation before the House today—are two instruments which hardly existed even 5 years ago. As a consequence, they were not incorporated in the last revision of the Bankruptcy Code which addressed instruments such as repurchase agreements. Both have now developed into markets involving billions of dollars.

Swaps agreements and forward contracts, should be accorded the same treatment under the Bankruptcy Code as other similar financial instruments currently enjoy.

Interest rate and currency swap agreements are vital risk management tools used by commercial banks, investment banks, thrift institutions, insurance companies, domestic and multinational corporations, foreign governments, and U.S. and foreign government-sponsored entities, not to mention many U.S. State and local governments. They offer borrowers the ability to carefully manage the interest rate or currency risks they undertake, making it easier and safer for companies or governments to raise the capital necessary for economic growth. Similarly, forward contracts allow both borrowers and purchasers of commodities to hedge their risks.

Mr. Speaker, the benefits of explicitly addressing this issue through this legislation would be substantial. Favorable action today would lower the cost of capital for American corporations, facilitating investment. It would facilitate the movement of capital and increase the efficiency of our financial markets. It would bring a degree of certainty and finality to the resolution of troubled market participants. It is important to note that, while the market and the economy as a whole would benefit, there would not be any corresponding damage to any other segment of the markets.

The approach adopted by this legislation enjoys the support of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Securities Industry Association, the Public Securities Association, the New York Clearinghouse, and the International Swap Dealers Association, as well as many financial institutions.

Mr. Speaker, this is important and needed legislation about which I have not heard a single negative word from anyone. I urge its passage.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4612, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATE ACT OF 1990

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 29) to amend the Clayton Act regarding interlocking directorates and officers, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 29

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Interlocking Directorate Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. Section 8 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 19) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. (a)(1) No person shall, at the same time, serve as a director or officer in any two corporations (other than banks, banking associations, and trust companies) that are—

"(A) engaged in whole or in part in commerce; and

"(B) by virtue of their business and location of operation, competitors, so that the elimination of competition by agreement between them would constitute a violation of any of the antitrust laws;

if each of the corporations has capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $10,000,000, as adjusted pursuant to paragraph (5) of this subsection.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), simultaneous service as a director or officer in any two corporations shall not be prohibited by this section if—

"(A) the competitive sales of either corporation are less than $1,000,000, as adjusted pursuant to paragraph (5) of this subsection;

"(B) the competitive sales of either corporation are less than 2 per centum of that corporation's total sales; or

"(C) the competitive sales of each corporation are less than 4 per centum of that corporation's total sales.

For purpose of this paragraph, 'competitive sales' means the gross revenues for all products and services sold by one corporation in competition with the other, determined on the basis of annual gross revenues for such products and services in that corporation's last completed fiscal year. For the purposes of this paragraph, 'total sales' means the gross revenues for all products and services sold by one corporation over that corporation's last completed fiscal year.

"(3) the eligibility of a director or officer under the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be determined by the capital, surplus and undivided profits, exclusive of dividends declared but not paid to stockholders, of each corporation at the end of that corporation's last completed fiscal year.

"(4) For purposes of this section, the term 'officer' means an officer elected or chosen by the Board of Directors.

"(5) For each fiscal year commencing after September 30, 1990, the $10,000,000 and $1,000,000 thresholds in this subsection shall be increased (or decreased) as of October 1 each year by an amount equal to the percentage increase (or decrease) in the gross national product, as determined by the Department of Commerce or its successor, for the year then ended over the level so established for the year ending September 30, 1989. As soon as practicable, but not later than October 30 of each year, the Federal Trade Commission shall publish the adjusted amounts required by this paragraph.

"(b) When any person elected or chosen as a director or officer of any corporation subject to the provisions hereof is eligible at the time of his election or selection to act for such corporation in such capacity, his eligibility to act in such capacity shall not be affected by any of the provisions hereof by reason of any change in the capital, surplus and undivided profits, or affairs of such corporation from whatever cause, until the expiration of one year from the date on which the event causing ineligibility occurred.".

SEC. 3. Section 10 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 20) is hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the floor H.R. 29, legislation to amend section 8 of the Clayton Act dealing with the prohibition against director interlocks.

Since passage of the Clayton Act in 1914, the antitrust laws have forbidden a director from sitting on the board of two or more competing corporations when at least one of the corporations has "capital, surplus or undivided capital" aggregating more than $1 million. Of course, this limitation for some time whether to modernize the threshold so as to make it more relevant today and in the future.

H.R. 29, the Interlocking Directorate Act of 1990, would amend section 8 of the Clayton Act by: First, increasing the jurisdictional threshold from $1 million to $10 million; second, creating three de minimis exemptions to the jurisdictional threshold where the risk of competitive harm is slight; third, extending coverage of the interlock prohibition to include officers as well as directors; and fourth, establishing a GNP inflator/deflator index for the jurisdictional threshold, to be adjusted annually. The legislation would also repeal section 10 of the Clayton Act, thus making common carriers subject to the same standards regarding directoral interlocks as other types of corporations.

While the fundamental purpose behind the enactment of section 8 remains an important one, the committee has concluded that the original statute does not adequately take into account the size or nature of the modern corporation in the current economy. In the current marketplace, the fact that a corporation may have capital, surplus, and undivided profits of $1 million should not automatically be taken as a sign that a director interlock will have a significant impact on competition. The committee believes that given the per se nature of the existing prohibition against interlocks, the creation of certain de minimis exceptions may likely assist corporations in selecting qualified directors without sacrificing any safeguards to prevent the dampening of competition.

I want to thank the original sponsor of the legislation, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], for his interest in the legislation. During the Judiciary Committee's deliberations, I offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute—which was accepted—to strike a provision that would have permitted a director interlock if two companies could have hypothetically merged under the antitrust laws. I believed that such a provision went too far by permitting nearly all interlocks to escape antitrust scrutiny. For once, the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department even agreed that competition might be harmed by such a test. In addition, my substitute amendment tightened up the de minimis safe harbors without causing undue problems for business management.

I want to note several technical changes made since the bill was reported in order to clarify its language for ease of application. First, in the new section 8(a)(1), I found it important to clarify that the interlock ban is directed at direct market rivals. That is made crystal clear by inserting the orginal statute's words "by virtue of their business and location of operations, competitors * * *." By preserving this phrase, we also preserve all the case law interpretations for the past 75 years. In addition, in the de minimis safe harbor section—section 8(a)(2)(C)—we have clarified that the test involves a calculation of the competitive sales of each corporation with that corporation's own total sales. We have made other similar clarifying changes in the definition of "competitive sales" for ease of application. Finally, we have updated the dates at which the GNP inflation index will be calculated. Because the legislation was first introduced in the 100th Congress, those dates were based on fiscal years 1988 and 1987, rather than on 1990 and 1989.

I believe the bill, as amended, is a sound step toward modernizing the antitrust laws without doing harm to our competition policy. However, as I indicated at committee markup, if we find that the safe harbor provisions are being abused or are facilitating collusive conduct, then we may revisit section 8 in the near future. In the meantime, I think H.R. 29 is the proper legislative response and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting passage of H.R. 29.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is always satisfying to watch a good bill move through the legislative process. I am bound to say, however, that the feeling is considerably enhanced when it is one's own bill. So it is that I am delighted that H.R. 29, the Interlocking Directorate Act of 1990, is now before the House, after being reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and commend Chairman BROOKS for bringing this bill to the floor.

This is the third consecutive Congress in which I have been the principal House sponsor of legislation proposing to revise and modernize section 8 of the Clayton Act. Section 8 currently prohibits a director from sitting on the boards of two or more competing companies if any one of them has over $1 million in assets. The notion that an interlock that involves a corporation with assets of $1 million would pose a significant competitive threat today is a concept that belongs in one of the museums of the Smithsonian.

So, this is legislation that seeks to bring the limits on interlocking directorates in the Federal antitrust laws in line with the business realities of the 1990's. By so doing it will also contribute to the more efficient use of resources by our antitrust enforcement agencies by directing their attention to conflicts of interest which are more likely to have an anticompetitive impact.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 29 would bring about the following changes in section 8:

Raise the jurisdictional threshold from $1 million to $10 million;

Require that both corporations involved exceed the $10 million threshold before an interlock could be prohibited;

Limit the prohibition to companies which are currently competitors, eliminating its application to companies which have been in competition only previously;

Add an indexing provision to section 8 which would adjust the jurisdictional threshold annually, based on percentage changes in the GNP;

Insert three de minimis or "safe harbor" standards in the statute, so that substantial competition between two corporations will be required before an interlock could be prohibited; and Expand the prohibition to include corporate officers, as well as directors.

In addition, H.R. 29 will, for the first time, make section 8 applicable to common carriers, such as railroads. Correspondingly, it repeals section 10 of the Clayton Act. That provision currently regulates certain commercial dealings between a common carrier and other companies, where the carrier has an officer, director, or manager that has a financial interest in the "other company." Thus, unlike section 8 which regulates horizontal interlocks, section 10 covers vertical relationships—typically supply contracts—and imposes burdensome, outdated competitive bidding requirements on common carriers.

In the words of one commentator, section 10 has become "a trap for the unwary, a bog for the litigator, a burden upon the courts and a delightful sinecure-maker for the regulator." (M. Lauck Walton, "Interlocks Between Common Carriers and Companies Dealing with a Carrier," 45 ICC Practitioners Journal, 452 (1978).) Its provisions reflect concerns more appropriate to a bygone age, when the railroads wielded market power that was unmatched elsewhere in our economy. Today, the transportation market is intensely competitive and, practically speaking, the railroads have to do everything possible to reduce their overhead costs. Corporate officers and directors are bound by State law to exercise a fiduciary duty—to deal in complete good faith—when acting on behalf of the company and its stockholders. Further, the Federal securities laws enacted in the 1930's also impose broad disclosure and reporting requirements which protect the public interest in these circumstances.

Very early in this effort to revise section 8, I concluded that section 10 was a statutory anachronism and that the railroads would be more fairly treated by simply bringing them under section 8 like everyone else. At the hearing held by the Subcommittee on Economic and Commercial Law on June 15, 1989, my idea to repeal section 10 was endorsed by the Federal Trade Commission. It subsequently has been formally endorsed by the Department of Justice, as well. Of course, those antitrust enforcement agencies also support the broader reforms to section 8 contained in H.R. 29.

In extending section 8 coverage to common carriers, we do not intend to prohibit existing, regulated joint transportation pool arrangements. So, for example, "competitive sales" as it is used in H.R. 29 does not extend to railroads offering their own equipment to shippers and offering equipment to shippers through jointly owned car pools that are established pursuant to 49 U.S.C. 11342.

Before concluding, there is one other matter which requires comment. My original version of H.R. 29 would have applied the merger review standard contained in section 7 of the Clayton Act to interlocking directorates. My logic was and is, if two companies would literally be permitted to merge together without violating our antitrust laws, how possibly could their sharing of a single corporate director be a serious threat to competition? The Federal Trade Commission endorsed my approach, as did a number of legal commentators. The Justice Department, however, expressed concern about the burden that this new test might place on their ability to enforce a revised section 8. They preferred not to expend the work hours on a merger analysis to determine the possible anticompetitive effects of a single corporate interlock. Simply put, Justice preferred that section 8 remain a per se statute for the sake of enforcement simplicity and resource allocation within the Antitrust Division.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in casting an affirmative vote for H.R. 29.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to a distinguished long-time supporter of this legislation, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FEIGHAN].

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us would make valuable changes in section 8 of the Clayton Act, the law prohibiting people from holding directorships on two competing corporations. I think that this legislation will prove to be an important part of congressional efforts to modernize our commercial laws to enhance U.S. global competitiveness.

Since the Clayton Act was passed in 1914, directors have been barred from serving on the boards of competing corporations if at least one of the corporations has capital of more than $1 million. Obviously any statutory threshold expressed in a flat dollar amount must from time to time be modernized to reflect the changes wrought by inflation. The bill updates this amount by including a threshold level of $10 million for the capital of the interlocking companies. The substitute amendment offered by Chairman BROOKS and passed unanimously by the Judiciary Committee provides that even if the two interlocking companies have capital of more than $10 million, a directorship on both would be allowed if the competing sales of either corporation are less than $1 million or if the competing sales are less than 2 percent of one corporation's total sales or less than 4 percent of their combined total sales.

Many U.S. corporations have had difficulty recruiting top-quality business professionals—especially minorities and women—to serve on their boards because these individuals are already serving on another board which has an overlap, albeit slight. H.R. 29, as amended, will ease this shortage and allow talented individuals to lend their expertise to several U.S. companies. In this way, the legislation will dramatically improve our competitive position, which is ever more important as the global marketplace is increasingly challenging U.S. preeminence.

I was an original cosponsor of H.R. 29, joining my distinguished colleague from New York, the ranking minority member on the Judiciary Committee, Mr. FISH. I supported Chairman BROOKS in his efforts to ensure that the bill expressed realistic levels and maintained the principle behind the original section 8. I commend both Mr. FISH and Chairman BROOKS for the time, effort, and expertise that went into bringing this bill to the floor. I look forward to its passage by the House and to the President's signature soon after.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD].

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 29, The Interlocking Directorate Act 1990, a bill that I have cosponsored along with a bipartisan group of colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee. I am particularly pleased that our distinguished committee chairman, JACK BROOKS, has lent his key support to this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this is truly legislation whose time has come. H.R. 29 will update the interlocking directorate section of the Clayton Act—section 8—and once again, make it a relevant part of our antitrust laws designed to ensure fair competition. Section 8 of the Clayton Act was enacted in 1914, and has not been substantively altered in 76 years. During those years there have been profound changes in the American economy and in the nature and scope of activities of American corporations—changes which have caused the specific and rigid prohibitions of section 8 to become obsolete. As a result, section 8 today produces results clearly not intended by its original drafters and which have a detrimental effect on the governance of American corporations.

The amendments to section 8 embodied in H.R. 29 will not dilute the force or original intent of Congress in enacting section 8, nor the effectiveness of the statute. Rather, they will only eliminate prohibitions against director interlocks among small corporations and prohibitions against interlocks involving de minimis amounts of commerce, neither of which is harmful to competition. At the same time, these amendments will strengthen certain prohibitions in section 8, by extending its coverage of corporate officers, as well as directors. I am particularly supportive of H.R. 29's extending coverage of the interlock prohibition to corporate officers as well as directors. The rationale for prohibiting common directors applies equally to common officers.

Overall, the effect of H.R. 29 will be to facilitate the ability of corporations to attract and draw qualified directors from a larger pool of candidates. Specifically, H.R. 29 will raise the jurisdictional threshold of section 8 from $1,000,000 to $10,000,000 in net worth, and will index that amount based upon future increases in the gross national product. In 1914, a corporation having a net worth of $1,000,000 was a substantial business entity and Congress intended section 8 to apply only to such large corporations whose activities would have a significant effect on the economy. In 1990, however, this $1,000,000 threshold causes the law to apply to even the smallest businesses.

The proposed jurisdictional limit of $10,000,000 in H.R. 29 was selected as the 1990 value of $1,000,000 1914 dollars. H.R. 29 contains indexing provisions which will prevent the need for further amendments to bring the jurisdictional limit into contemporary reality.

H.R. 29 will also establish clear de minimis safe harbor exceptions to the general director interlock prohibition, so that common directorates between companies which have extremely small competitive overlaps will not be prohibited. In 1914, when section 8 was passed, most companies concentrated on just one or perhaps a few lines of business. Today, it is common for a corporation to be engaged in many diversified business activities, some of them very small in relation to its overall business.

Numerous authorities on corporate governance agree that the board of directors of a corporation should be composed primarily of outside directors. Because many minor competitive overlaps disqualify candidates already sitting on the boards, it is often very difficult for a diversified company to find suitable outside directors from a very severely reduced pool of candidates.

In this testimony on behalf of the legislation, TRW general counsel Martin A. Coyle cited several examples of competitive overlaps which disqualified potential TRW directors. Of the five cases he discussed, the largest competitive overlap amounted to three one-hundredths of 1 percent of TRW's sales. I cannot believe that such tiny overlaps could ever have an anticompetitive effect. Congress could not, and should not, permit such a result.

In modernizing section 8, H.R. 29 will provide three bright line de minimis exceptions to the prohibitions of the act: First, if the competitive sales of either corporation is less than $1,000,000; second, if the competitive sales of either corporation are less than 2 percent of its total sales; or third, if the competitive sales of both corporations' total sales are less than 4 percent. In each of these circumstances, none of the decisions concerning the operation of the overlapping business will likely come to the attention of the board and the overlap will have no significance in the marketplace.

Finally, H.R. 29 also repeals section 10 of the Clayton Act. Section 10 was enacted when railroads enjoyed immense market power, a situation which is vastly different from that which exists today. Its unrealistic limitations on railroad purchases without competitive bidding have had the effect of discouraging companies, whose directors sit on railroad boards, from attempting to obtain railroad business. Section 10 has also lessened the pool of director candidates available to railroads, after eliminating all potential suppliers. The committee concluded that the economic factors that once justified section 10 are no longer present. This provision in today's world has only deleterious effects, and plays no positive role in antitrust enforcement.

In conclusion, the concepts embodied in H.R. 29 are widely supported by antitrust enforcement agencies, learned commentators, and the private bar upon which the enforcement agencies depend for compliance with the law. Congressman FISH, our ranking Republican member, deserves credit for the persistent and determined manner in which he has pressed for section 8 reform legislation over a period of three Congresses. Now, after many years of effort, we appear to be on the verge of success. I strongly urge passage of H.R. 29 to modernize the interlocking directorate provisions of the Clayton Act.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 29, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4612 and H.R. 29, the bills just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

RELATING TO HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES BY THE GOVERNMENT OF CUBA

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 381) relating to human rights abuses by the Government of Cuba and reprisals by the Cuban Government against those Cuban citizens who testified before the Cuba Working Group of the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 381

Whereas the United States Department of State Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 1989 finds that the Government of Cuba engages in the systematic abuse of human rights;

Whereas the report indicates that human rights conditions in Cuba have worsened significantly in 1989;

Whereas, pursuant to United Nations Human Rights Commission decision 1988/106 in March 1988, the commission undertook a review of Cuban human rights practices by the Cuba Working Group of the United Nations Human Rights Commission;

Whereas, in response to international pressure, the Government of Cuba invited a delegation of the United Nations Human Rights Commission to Cuba to investigate the status of human rights, offered to guarantee the Cuba Working Group representatives free and unhindered access to the people of Cuba, and promised that Cubans who presented testimony to the United Nations representatives would not be punished;

Whereas the Government of Cuba has since engaged in an effort to punish human rights defenders, a number of whom were interviewed by representatives of the Cuba Working Group of the United Nations Human Rights Commission;

Whereas more than 60 human rights activists have been arrested or detained since the Cuba Working Group concluded its investigation in September 1988;

Whereas Cuban human rights activists, including Enrique Acosta Ruiz, Tania Diaz Castro, Alfredo Samuel Martinez Lara, Elizardo Sanchez Santa Cruz, Hiram Abi Cobas, Javier Roberto Bahomonde Masot, and David Moya Alfonso have been arrested and forced to serve prison terms for their legitimate human rights activities.

Whereas the Government of Cuba has denied internationally-recognized human rights monitors access to the trial of a number of human rights leaders;

Whereas such arrests and imprisonments constitute a pattern of harassment and intimidation aimed at those Cuban human rights activists and Cuban citizens who cooperated with the Cuba Working Group;

Whereas, on March 6, 1990, the United Nations Human Rights Commission approved a resolution citing its concerns regarding the human rights situation in Cuba;

Whereas President Fidel Castro announced that the Government of Cuba refuses to comply with a single provision of the resolution;

Whereas, after adoption of the United Nations Human Rights Commission resolution, at least 11 human rights activists have been arrested and others have been harassed and threatened; and

Whereas it is in the interest of all parties to ensure that nations do not undermine the efforts of the United Nations Human Rights Commission: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) commends the United Nations Human Rights Commission for extending the mandate of the Cuba Working Group with regard to the human rights situation in Cuba;

(2) condemns the Government of Cuba for engaging in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally-recognized human rights against the Cuban people and deplores the continued systematic harassment of Cuban human rights activists;

(3) calls upon the Government of Cuba to honor its repeated guarantees that individuals who testified before representatives of the Cuba Working Group of the United Nations Human Rights Commission would not be subject to reprisals, detentions, or negative consequences of any nature whatsoever;

(4) urges the Government of Cuba to release all human rights activists and other political prisoners; and

(5) calls upon the Government of Cuba to meet universally-recognized standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON].

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, sponsored by our colleague, Congressman CHRIS SMITH, House Resolution 381 calls attention to the continuing and, in fact, worsening human rights climate in Cuba. The level of abuses is underscored by the Castro government's efforts to sabotage the U.N. Human Rights Commission's investigation of human rights violations in that country. Initiated by the United States, under the leadership of the U.S. Ambassador to the Human Rights Commission, Armando Valladares, the United Nations has finally taken notice of what is now the only Spanish-speaking dictatorship in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the Commission's 1988 mandate, a United Nations working group conducted a human rights investigation in Cuba. This past year the Commission approved an extension of its mandate. Cuba's disregard for human rights is compounded by the fact that Castro has thrown in jail the human rights monitors who the United Nations group interviewed during its visit. This resolution calls upon the Government of Cuba to release those brave human rights monitors who testified before the United Nations working group and for the release of all political prisoners.

Mr. Speaker, Communist governments and dictatorships of all political persuasions are dying throughout the world. Apparently no one has told Mr. Castro. This resolution says to the Cuban people that the international community will continue to support their democratic aspirations so that their country can join the community of new democratic nations.

I want to commend Congressman CHRIS SMITH for crafting this resolution and Congressmen BEREUTER, BROOMFIELD, CROCKETT, and LAGOMARSINO for working in a bipartisan manner to promote human rights in Cuba.

Most of all, I want to commend the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Congressman FASCELL. He has championed the cause for human rights, both in Cuba and throughout the world, for many years and it is due to his leadership that this legislation is being considered today.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the resolution.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the winds of change and democracy are blowing around the world. North Korea is now apparently trying to improve ties with Western democracies; even Albania is reported to be liberalizing its policies.

That leaves China and Cuba. In this hemisphere, Fidel Castro is the pit bull of communism. He long ago sunk his teeth into Marxist economics and Stalinist politics, and he will not let go.

His policies are breaking the back of Cuba's economy and the will of Cuba's people. Those in Cuba who opposed Castro have suffered jail, torture, and even death.

For years, democratic nations have protested Castro's policies in the United Nations. For years, the U.N. Commission on Human Rights looked the other way.

In 1988, at the request of the State Department, Chairman FASCELL and I flew to Geneva to urge the Commission to lift the curtain of silence about conditions in Castro's Cuba.

Soon after that trip, the Commission decided it could no longer ignore what was happening in Cuba. Our Ambassador to the Commission, Armando Valladares, worked hard to get that body to look at the human rights violations in Cuba. He succeeded.

In 1989, the Commission conducted an investigation and found a wealth of proof and first-hand testimony that basic freedoms—the freedom of movement, of privacy, of association, of speech—simply do not exist in Cuba.

Conditions are bad, and a State Department country report demonstrates that they are getting worse.

Fidel Castro promised the Commission that he would cooperate with the investigation, that he would not retaliate against Cubans who talked to investigators. Fidel Castro lied.

Those who talked to the investigators about the human rights situation have been hunted down, harassed, tortured, and thrown into prison.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution before us today congratulates the U.N. Commission on Human Rights for its efforts regarding the terrible human rights problems in Cuba, and it condemns the Government of Cuba for its violations of internationally recognized human rights principles.

As a cosponsor, I thank Congressman CHRIS SMITH for his leadership in advancing House Resolution 381. Mr. SMITH currently serves as a delegate to the United Nations General Assembly and in that capacity, he has worked closely with the United States delegation to the U.N. Human Rights Commission, gaining a deep understanding about Cuba's situation. I also wish to thank Chairman FASCELL for bringing the resolution to the floor. He has been in the forefront of the effort to focus world attention on human rights abuses in Cuba.

Mr. Speaker, the U.N. Human Rights Commission resolution and the resolution before us today, provide a clear message that the Government of Cuba is being held accountable for its human rights record, and that violations of those rights will not be ignored nor condoned. I urge my colleagues to support the passage of House Resolution 381.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] for yielding me this time. He has been working very hard and for as long as he has been on the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the cause of human rights and other important foreign policy matters that confront this country. I am grateful to him for his leadership and his hard work on the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution. I wish to express my appreciation to my ranking Republican member, the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD]. We have worked together very diligently, not only on this issue but on many others, to forge important bipartisan foreign policy positions that we believe are in the best interests of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I was very proud to join with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] at the request of the Department of State to make a trip to the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva sometimes ago. We worked very, very hard over a short period of time to convince our colleagues from other countries that this was a serious matter, not simply a political issue, but a fundamental matter for the people of the United States.

I would like to remind my colleagues that on the matter of Cuba, Fidel Castro is not a new issue in this House. Since the advent of his taking power in Cuba and his subversion of what I consider the true revolution in Cuba, under the leadership of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, many actions have been taken by this body with regard to the whole issue of the policy of Castro's government. This was particularly the case when Castro had the idea that he would be the leader of the entire Third World and therefore was very anxious to carry out his ideals in all parts of the world through subversion and political activity of all kinds. That was long before, I might add, many of the refugees who escaped the disaster in Cuba came to the United States and became citizens.

The actions of Mr. Castro both in Cuba and outside of Cuba have been of direct concern to the people of the United States. Now, of course, a great many Cuban refugees have become citizens and had the chance to express their feelings on the subject.

The matter now takes on renewed interest and renewed activity, as rightfully it should. Castro has from time to time been very, very clever in how he deals with the politics of the world. But on the question of human rights, he has been absolutely vulnerable and finally it has caught up with him. When, as the gentleman from Michigan has stated, Castro said he would not take retribution against those who have testified about abuses and what was actually going on in Cuba, the exact opposite happened. Those who testified and many other activists who simply have expressed a human right of the most basic kind, which is to point out the harassment and torture and other unpleasant actions against people who are expressing their belief about how their government should treat their own people, were jailed, tortured, and harassed.

It is certainly very proper for the Congress of the United States, on behalf of the American people, to say we condemn those kinds of activities. We condemn the policy and ask for proper treatment under all kinds of international laws, agreements, and even the word of the Cuban leader himself which he has gone back on.

We know that a lot can happen when the moral force of people is aroused and the spotlight of public opinion is turned on; we can see what has happened. No person expected, in the short period of time, the tremendous change that has taken place in Eastern Europe and other places around the world. Just as sure as the old expression goes that "night follows day," and vice versa, it will come to Cuba, too, because people cannot forever stand that kind of subjugation. Sooner or later condition in Cuba will give way to respect for people as persons, to respect for the individual's dignity, to respect for freedom and the right to speak, and to respect for religion and all of the freedoms that we take for granted here. Everyone in the world should have those opportunities. They are being denied in Cuba today. That is the reason why over all of the years that I have been here, since the takeover of the Cuban people by Castro, this Congress has time and again expressed this opinion, never losing sight of the fact that what the American people have to say through their elected representative eventually has great force in the world.

People understand values. Values are stronger than any know force. It certainly was a sense of values and a determination of people to be free, to have respect for individual dignity, that brought the Berlin Wall down. We hope that the same will happen in Cuba.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of my time be yielded to the gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my strong support for House Resolution 381, relating to the human rights abuses by the Government of Cuba and reprisals by the Cuban Government against those Cuban citizens who testified before the Cuba Working Group of the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

Despite the democratization of Eastern Europe, the Cuban nation remains as testimony to the legacy of Stalinistic despotism. It is, however, a legacy that is eroding. On June 16, 1981, President Ronald Reagan made the following observation:

> It is impossible—and history reveals this—for any form of government to completely deny freedom to people and have that go on interminably. There eventually comes an end to it, and I think the things we're seeing, not only in Poland but the reports that are beginning to come out of Russia itself about the younger generation and its indication that Communism is an aberration—it's not a normal way of living for human beings. And I think we are seeing the first beginning cracks, the beginning of the end.

President Reagan uttered those words 9 years ago. What has happened to communism throughout the world since that time is remarkable. What is equally remarkable is that President Castro cannot see that communism and all of its manifestations does not work.

The beautiful island nation of Cuba, with its fine people, remains a nation held captive by despotic leadership—a leadership that cannot admit that the faulty logic it has predicated its government upon is wrong and simply does not work.

In 1989, the State Department Country Report on Human Rights Practices found that Cuba systematically abuses the human rights of its citizens. Those abuses include denial of a fair trial to those accused of crimes as well as the arrest for crimes of a political nature.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution is a timely and appropriate effort. I commend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] for all of the outstanding work he does in the realm of human rights, as well as for his particularly outstanding work on this measure. There is no longer a place for nations in this new multipolar and increasingly interdependent world for nations that deny the basic right to be free to its citizens. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker,

I urge the unanimous adoption of this measure.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FEIGHAN], who is a member of the committee and a leader on human rights.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 365 regarding the human rights situation in Cuba. Today, Fidel Castro stands alone as the only dictator in Latin America. In a year that has been marked by democratic openings around the world, the Cuban regime has clung to its singular hold on power, denying its citizens the right to change their government, to speak freely, to associate freely, to travel freely—in short, to enjoy basic human rights.

The resolution focuses particular attention on the plight of Cuban human rights monitors who have been arrested and detained by the Cuban authorities. Last April, five members of the Cuban Human Rights Party were arrested for announcing a demonstration aimed at calling for glasnost in Cuba during the visit of Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev. According to the State Department's human rights report, the Human Rights Party leaders were held in incommunicado detention for 3 days, tried in a closed proceeding and convicted of "illegal association." Amnesty International has criticized the Cuban Government for trying Cuban citizens for the peaceful expression of their views.

The resolution before us condemns the Government of Cuba for engaging in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally-recognized human rights against the Cuban people and deplores the continued systematic harassment of Cuban human rights activists.

I want to commend the sponsor of the resolution, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], as well as my subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], and my full committee chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] for their continuing leadership on human rights concerns in Cuba and around the world.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, as an original cosponsor of House Resolution 381, I want to commend my colleague and good friend on the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. CHRISTOPHER SMITH, for his leadership on this issue.

This resolution condemns the government of Fidel Castro for its consistent pattern of gross violations of human rights against the Cuban people.

Those of us who have followed closely events in Cuba find particularly repugnant Castro's total disregard for the protection of civil liberties and basic human rights of those individuals who testified before the Cuba working group of the U.N. Human Rights Commission.

After the United States finally succeeded in getting United Nations approval in 1988 for a review of human rights practices in Cuba—with Congressman SMITH playing an influential role in that effort—the government of Fidel Castro yielded to international pressure and allowed the U.N. delegation to go to Cuba. They were promised free and unhindered access to the people of Cuba and were also assured that those Cubans who presented testimony to the U.N. working group would not be punished.

The outcome of the U.N. review produced little in the way of condemnation of Castro's human rights practices, but Castro made sure that those cooperating with the U.N. working group were made to suffer. Many of those human rights defenders in Cuba interviewed were then punished by Castro with imprisonment, harassment or intimidation.

Although some diehard Castro apologists refuse to acknowledge the historical pattern of human rights abuses and repression of the Cuban people, one particularly telling account of years of torture and punishment is contained in the book "Against All Hope", written by Armando Valladares. His book depicting his 22 years in Cuban prisons is a scathing indictment of human rights abuses by the Castro regime. In a way, it was poetic justice that Armando Valladares was leading the U.S. delegation to the U.N. Commission on Human Rights when the decision was taken to investigate Cuba.

Castro's totalitarian regime is virtually isolated now that democratic changes are sweeping through the world. His efforts to maintain his power and control over the people of Cuba are reaching ever more desperate proportions as witnessed by his feeble attempts with reprisals against Radio Marti and TV Marti.

It is imperative that we in the Congress forcefully and convincingly condemn the orchestrated campaign of terror carried out by Castro against those who seek justice for those defending human rights in Cuba.

I urge my colleagues to give their strong support to House Resolution 381, condemning Castro and the Government of Cuba for human rights abuses.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], who has been a strong supporter of human rights around the world.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, first I want to commend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] for this strong resolution, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], who is a champion of human rights everywhere in the world and has had an outstanding record in this area. Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would commend our subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], who is a true champion of human rights in this hemisphere and who has been involved with this issue probably longer than most.

Why is this resolution important? Well, first of all, it sends a signal that the U.S. Congress is sending a message that we will not condone human rights violations by governments on the right and on the left. In this case, it is Fidel Castro. Human rights is not one of his strong areas. The United Nations sends some monitors down to investigate human rights, and the United Nations is probably the most objective kind of monitoring group that Fidel Castro could possibly have. And what does he do? He throws them out, and then he jails those who talk to them.

This is really intolerable, Mr. Speaker. Artists, cultural people, and politicians from the left and from the right condemn these acts, and they make no sense.

I have not always agreed with our foreign policy toward Cuba. I think we have to have some kind of a dialog and negotiation, not one that gives Fidel Castro anything, but I think we would be able to deal with issues of family reunification and other human rights issues in the hemisphere if we had some kind of dialog and not a policy of isolation.

That, however, does not obscure the fact that Fidel Castro is probably right now, along with a couple of others, one of the worst human rights violators in the world. He ranks maybe with the gentleman from Albania and maybe the gentleman from North Korea and maybe others that I have failed to mention. But here clearly is a resolution that says we condemn these practices and we will not stand for them.

A lot of people read these resolutions. Some people ask, "What does a sense-of-Congress resolution mean?" It simply means, first of all, hope to a lot of people. It says that the U.S. Congress has gone on record. Second, it recognizes the people on the minority side who have worked on this issue for many years, and I see them here among my colleagues. I see the new Member from Miami, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who serves on the Human Rights Commission, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], who probably has held a hearing a week since he has been chairman. And then, of course, there is Chairman FASCELL.

Mr. Speaker, I think this resolution deserves at least 400 votes from this body, and I urge strong support for the resolution.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentlewoman from Florida, for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleagues for their statements of support for the resolution that is before us, and I want to thank Chairman FASCELL for his leadership on behalf of human rights and, in particular, human rights for the Cubans in Castro's regime.

I also appreciate very much the support this measure has received from the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CROCKETT], and from ranking members, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER], and the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 381 commends the United Nations Commission on Human Rights for extending the mandate for the Cuba working group on human rights and condemns the Castro regime's egregious violations of human rights. Particularly, the resolution calls on Castro and his government to cease its harassment, detention, and arrest of human rights activists who have cooperated with the U.N. working group. The House of Representatives today goes on record again to call on Castro to release all human rights activists and other political prisoners.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the U.S. delegation to the United Nations this past year, I had the privilege of working closely with U.S. Ambassador Armando Valladares at the United Nations Human Rights Commission meeting in Geneva. Having endured for some 22 years the brutal conditions of prison life and torture in Cuba, Ambassador Valladares can strongly empathize with the human rights activists now imprisoned in Cuba. In his freedom, Ambassador Valladares has been a shining example of human rights activism and effectiveness. He has served the United States, both the Reagan and now the Bush administrations, very, very well as a skilled diplomat and staunch spokesman for those who cannot speak for themselves. He has spoken out boldly for the weakest, the imprisoned, and the repressed. He is to be given special commendation for his tenacious efforts to advance through the United Nations Human Rights Commission the U.S.-sponsored resolution on Cuba.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] mentioned this earlier in his comments, and I would urge all Members to read Valladares' book, "Against All Hope." I read it and was moved to tears. It is a chonicle of one man's deep faith in God and his indomitable spirit to overcome no matter what kind of tortures came his way. It shows without any doubt what it is like to live in one of Castro's hellish gulags. I urge all Members to read it. It is called "Against All Hope."

Mr. Speaker, it appears that the Castro regime is not impressed by the U.N.'s criticism of its actions, nor is he impressed by the worldwide movement to promote basic human rights and democratization. While in other part of the world former prisoners of war and opposition labor leaders are now in government and even performing as heads of states, witness Czechoslovakia, Castro continues to commit crimes against his own people. As noted by America's Watch in a March 1990 report, "Castro's regime * * * has clearly made a political decision to punish any form of dissent."

Mr. Speaker, in early March, the United Nations Human Rights Commission approved a resolution criticizing human rights abuses in Cuba and called for continued monitoring and examination of the situation there. While the U.S.S.R. and the Ukrainian S.S.R. voted against the measure, I think Members would be pleased to know that some of the new European democracies such as Czechoslovakia and Poland not only voted for it but cosponsored our resolution. Bulgaria and Hungary likewise cast aye votes in favor of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, let me note here that Fidel Castro's response to the U.N. initiative was perhaps predictable, but it was nevertheless disappointing. In his speech in Havana on March 8, he declared, and I quote, that he had no intention of complying with "a single comma of that resolution." On the following day, following adjournment of the U.N. Commission, eight prominent human rights activists were arrested in Havana.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, since the Commission-appointed Cuba working group concluded its investigation in September 1988, over 60 human rights activists who cooperated with the group have been arrested. Castro simply has not kept his word to the United Nations, and his assurances that individuals who testified to the U.N. group would not be dealt with severely have been a lie.

Mr. Speaker, as we speak here today on the floor of the House, there are at least 20 human rights monitors who are now serving sentences because they spoke out to the U.N. group.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot allow this to continue. We need to speak up forcefully. We joint the United Nation's action on this, and I hope that the Members, as my colleague said a moment ago, will give unanimous support for this resolution to send a clear, nonambiguous signal to Fidel Castro that he must cease his human rights abuses.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman form Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 381, and in strong support of the continuing struggle for human rights in Cuba. I heartily commend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] for introducing this resolution.

It is a great source of sorrow for me to think that a mere 90 miles from our shores, an entire people is still enslaved to the whims of a dictator. Our Cuban brothers and sisters have bravely weathered the past 30 years of misery and oppression. It is time to bring their nightmare to an end.

Mr. Speaker, I had the distinct honor of going to Geneva in February to help our Ambassador, Armando Valladares, lobby for a human rights resolution on Cuba at the U.N. Human Rights Commission. The resolution passed thanks to our new friends in Eastern Europe who voted with us, and against tyranny. Those new friends represent a new world. It is a world in which the likes of Fidel Castro are becoming increasingly isolated.

Armando Valladares wrote, while he was languishing in one of Castro's jails:

> They have taken everything away from me—or almost everything. I still have my smile, the proud sense that I'm a free man, and an eternally flowering garden in my soul.

Those are things Mr. Speaker, which were put in every human being by God Almighty, and a million Fidel Castros cannot take them away.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the resolution condemning human rights abuses in Cuba and I commend my colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey, for his fine work in the area of human rights—not only in the case of Cuba, but also in Romania, the Soviet Union, and elsewhere around the world.

Sadly, the changes bringing freedom and justice to oppressed nations have yet to bring an end to ongoing and egregious human rights abuses in Fidel Castro's Cuba.

As communism crumbles in nearly all corners of the world, Cuba's Castro remains the last vestige of that failed philosophy in our hemisphere.

With a changing world closing in on him, Castro remains like a relic of the past. Still waving his arms, still shaking his fist in the air, Castro rants and raves about the perceived glories of long-ago yesterdays that are now clouded by harsh realities of the economic and sociological failure of totalitarian communism.

Castro's time is running out. With each day the resolve of the Cuban people to achieve freedom grows stronger. Each day international scrutiny provides witness of human rights violations in Cuba, of unnecessary suffering of Cubans and of isolation of Castro's Cuba from the rest of the world.

Mr. Speaker, on March 6 of this year the U.N. Human Rights Commission voted for the first time to single out Castro's Cuba, expressing its concerns regarding the human rights situation there. That vote received support from several Eastern European nations as well.

Castro's response to this action reflects his desperation and increasing isolation. By mounting a campaign of persecution against human rights activists, and refusing to comply with the U.N. Commission's resolution, Castro chose to ignore the writing on the wall that spelled the downfall of dictators in Romania, Czechoslovakia, and East Germany.

It was a bad choice.

The resolution before us today will increase the glare of public awareness on the shadowy world of communist oppression in Cuba at a time when Castro can ill afford such exposure.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this bill.

If Fidel Castro wants to sail off the edge of the flat Marxist earth, so be it—but let him do it alone, and let the suffering stop in Cuba.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as a Cuban refugee who fled my native island in 1960, along with thousands of other exiles, I wish to congratulate the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], my colleague, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], my colleague, for presenting this very important resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I witnessed first hand the horrors of communism and can personally attest to the persecution which occurs every day in my native Cuba. Not a day goes by when any congressional office in Miami is not flooded with tearful petitions from mothers, and fathers, and sons, and daughters whose families have been torn apart by the regressive communism of Fidel Castro.

Mr. Speaker, even the most basic human right is violated in Cuba. There is no freedom of expression, no freedom to organize, no freedom of religion. In fact, the practice of religious faith is actively persecuted by Fidel Castro, and any person who speaks on behalf of human rights is placed in jail.

Mr. Speaker, I know what it is to lose one's homeland to communism, and the whole world, and especially Cuban exiles in the United States, rejoiced when the Soviet bloc nations rejected totalitarian regimes and embraced democracy.

We want this resolution to bring about that same effect. We wish to give hope to those enslaved Cubans still suffering in Castro's gulag.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield my remaining time to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH], who is a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and an advocate of promoting human rights in Cuba.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], my colleague, for bringing this before the House, as well as the gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN], my colleague from Florida, our newest Member from Florida, for being so actively involved in something that is obviously so close to her heart and to the hearts of many of her constituents and my constituents and, frankly, something which is so important to us here in the United States. It is not just that she and I may share a great many Cuban-Americans. It is not just that it is a situation that involves human rights. It is a matter of perspective of over 30 years of reality where people so close to this country have had nothing of what we enjoy in the way of democracy, justice, freedom, all of the basic rights that we believe in and we enjoy. They have tasted none of them.

Mr. Speaker, for over 30 years the Cubans have had the boot of a single dictator. There has not been an election in Cuba for over 30 years. There has not been the freedom of assembly for over 30 years. There has not been the freedom to do anything; own a newspaper, print the truth; own a radio station, tell the truth; own a TV station, show the truth. None of that can be done in Cuba. If my colleagues have seen pictures from Cuba, they have seen that one cannot even buy a decent car. People in Cuba are still driving cars from the 1950's and cannibalizing everything they can get their hands on.

So, I ask, "Is this the great society that Castro sold them a dream of in 1959 when they rose up against the dictator to take possession of their own country?"

Mr. Speaker, it is not. It is a bitter, cruel truth, that just as in Nicaragua the revolution in Cuba was co-opted and stolen by the head of the revolution. Castro has dungeoned, jailed, beaten, oppressed, tried, and murdered all of his political opponents. No political parties flourish. There is no dissent in Cuba.

In a way it is worse today in Cuba than even in Eastern Europe because in some of those countries there were political and/or social or cultural organizations that had some capability to get together. These were the groups that ultimately came to the front during the last year or so when communism began to crumble.

Not so in Cuba. In fact, many of us in Florida share the tragic belief that, if there were to be freedom in Cuba, it may well be a violent birth of freedom, and nobody wants to see that.

But there is no dissent. It is completely suppressed. Castro has done everything he can to avoid giving the people of Cuba who fought, fought bitterly in the late 1950's to get it, any chance for freedom, justice or democracy.

Last year Castro held a number of show trials. He claimed that they were for the purpose of trying and convicting people involved in drugs. Well, the reality is, and we know for a fact, that his administration, his dictatorship, has been heavily involved in drug trafficking for many years, and those trials last year, and the murder, the execution of those found guilty, had nothing to do with drugs at all. It was a matter of suppressing whatever little bit of political dissent there may have been by virtue of taking a few of the people who were popular inside the country and getting rid of them by execution through the legal means of a trial, at least legal in Cuba.

Mr. Speaker, this is not what we want for the people of Cuba. It is not what we wanted for the people in Eastern Europe or the Soviet Union, and it is not what we want for people anywhere. But this is 90 miles off the shore of the United States.

We are projecting by radio, TV and Radio Marti, the images, the sounds and the pictures of democracy. But they are being rejected and rebuffed by Castro who is just about the last, just about the last, totalitarian leader on the face of the Earth. It is time that this Congress not only enunciate this policy, but make the administration stand up to the policy of trying to make democracy the ruling, the reigning, method of government in Cuba.

So again I commend the gentleman from New Jersey and the chairman of the full committee and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] for bringing this to the attention of the House. This deserves to be passed with a resounding aye and not a single no.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 381, which condemns the Government of Cuba for human rights violations.

Subsequent to the conclusion of an investigation into human rights abuses in Fidel Castro's Cuba by the Cuba Working Group of the United Nations Human Rights Commission, Castro detained or jailed more than 60 human rights activists, most of whom cooperated with the U.N. group while it conducted its investigation in Cuba.

The systematic harassment of Cuban human rights activists is an indictment of the Castro regime. At a time when other formerly totalitarian countries have opted for greater openness and freedom in their societies, Fidel Castro is cracking down on precisely those elements of Cuban society which have called for Cuban-style glasnost and perestroika.

Last month, I was joined by 118 of my colleagues in a letter to Fidel Castro, appealing to him to free the jailed human rights activists and other political prisoners held in captivity, to permit the formation of independent political parties and to schedule national elections. Signatories to the letter, both Democrats and Republicans, liberals and conservatives, were united in the conviction that things in Cuba have to change, and change soon. It signaled that after a decade of contentious national debate on Nicaragua, El Salvador and other Latin American issues, there is a consensus regarding Cuba.

This resolution represents an important part of that consensus: our categorical condemnation of Castro's abysmal human rights record. I urge all of my colleagues to support this resolution. It deserves the overwhelming support of this body.

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, Cuba must be held accountable for its human rights abuses. I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 381, which condemns the Cuban Government for systematic harassment of Cuban human rights activists, and calls on President Castro to meet internationally recognized standards for conduct, including the release of all human rights activists and other political prisoners.

On February 28, my colleague, ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN, and I introduced a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress that the United Nations Human Rights Commission [UNHRC] should continue to investigate human rights abuses in Cuba. Subsequently, the UNHRC voted, over the strenuous objections of Castro and his allies, to look into Cuban rights violations for the fourth year in a row. The U.S. Ambassador to the UNRHC, Armando Valladares deserves great credit for this outcome. Ambassador Valladares has survived lengthy imprisonment in Cuba and is now peacefully working with the United Nations for change in his home country.

In September 1988, the UNHRC sent a delegation, called the Cuba Working Group, to Cuba to investigate human rights abuses. Hundreds of Cubans came out to testify before the U.N. delegation. Reportedly more than 20 people who testified were subsequently arrested despite assurances from Cuban Government that there would be no reprisals.

In the past year, dictators have been falling around the world. House Resolution 381 expresses the sense of the House that Cuba must observe basic human rights. This sense is not just that of Congress, it is a growing sense around the world. We are moving toward a more peaceful world that will not tolerate dictators like Castro.

I urge quick passage of this important resolution.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my strong support for House Resolution 381. This bill condemns the human rights record of the Government of Cuba, especially the recent reprisals against Cubans who testified before the Cuba Working Group of the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

The United States is a nation that was founded for liberty and human rights—for the freedom to speak and assemble and worship, each in our own way. This is our heritage—one that we must never abandon for the expediency of the moment.

These are values for which we have stood for 200 years. These are the values that we seek from the Cuban Government.

On March 6, 1990, the United Nations Human Rights Commission approved a resolution citing concerns about the human rights situation in Cuba which was later renounced by Fidel Castro. Since the resolution was adopted, at least 11 human rights activists have been arrested and others have been harassed.

This is inexcusable and stands in direct conflict with the values and principles we stand for in this Nation and attempt to promote around the world.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 381 overwhelmingly passed the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. I urge all my colleagues to send a message to Fidel Castro and support House Resolution 381.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support for House Resolution 381, a resolution focusing attention on the continuing human rights abuses in Cuba.

This timely resolution rightly condemns the continued repression inflicted upon freedom loving people of Cuba by the authoritarian regime of Fidel Castro.

Despite international isolation and condemnation, Castro has adamantly rejected the idea of glasnost and continues to maintain a chokehold on all democratic forces.

Respected human rights monitors report that virtually all internationally recognized human rights are restricted in Cuba, some of them severely.

Americas Watch reports that "there are no free press, no opposition parties, no independent judiciary, no independent labor unions, and no legally recognized human rights organizations." In addition, freedom of speech, religion, assembly and other fundamental rights are virtually nonexistent.

The State Department human rights report for 1989 states that the Cuban Government cracked down on all forms of dissent, prevented human rights groups from conducting activities, and maintained a strict adherence to the rigid Communist principles.

Those brave Cuban citizens who have risked to speak out are imprisoned without trial and are denied due process. Several hundred political prisoners, some imprisoned over 25 years ago, continue to languish in jail.

Cuba's reigning dictator, Fidel Castro, apparently hasn't woken up to the truth that his former Communist colleagues have learned.

That is that fundamental freedoms and human rights can only be suppressed for so long.

However, just like Eastern Europe and other Communist countries, democracy will one day come to Cuba.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 381.

The question was taken.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

AUTHORIZING PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF BOOKLET ENTITLED "OUR FLAG"

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 311) providing for printing of additional copies of the booklet entitled "Our Flag."

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 311

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed 108,000 additional copies of the booklet entitled "Our Flag" (House Document 100-247), of which 88,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California [Mr. BATES] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Concurrent Resolution 311, which provides for the printing of additional copies of the booklet entitled "Our Flag."

Last year it was realized that one of Congress' most popular publications, "Our Flag" had become obsolete and was out of print. This was long before the flag had become a political issue.

Last year a resolution was adopted which called for the booklet to be revised and reissued and an all new version of "Our Flag" was released.

It was with the cosponsor of Senator FORD and the efforts of the Joint Committee on Printing who oversaw the revision and printing that made this a remarkable document. The new booklet has been very popular and many Members have run out of copies.

In order to meet the demand, House Concurrent Resolution 311 would give every Member and Senator 200 copies in addition to the usual number. Each Member of Congress will have copies to distribute in the districts and States, and it will be available for sale in the Capitol and by the Government Printing Office. It is my hope that copies of "Our Flag" go into every school classroom in America as a constant reminder of the glorious history of the flag, and its importance to our national morale.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 311, providing for the printing of 108,000 additional copies of the educational booklet, "Our Flag." This 52-page booklet provides our citizens, as well as visitors from other countries, with the history and uses of the U.S. flag, information which is as interesting as it is useful.

The Stars and Stripes is a proud and honorable story which merits the attention of our citizens and visitors. The demand for this document, which has necessitated its reprinting, clearly demonstrates how useful it is as an educational tool for all of us.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this document is an excellent resource and urge my colleagues to support its reprinting through House Concurrent Resolution 311.

I think it is incredible timing on the part of the gentleman from California and the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Illinois, that we should be debating this particular resolution today, the day after the Supreme Court held oral arguments on the statute that we passed last year in the Congress to protect our flag against its defacement or its burning.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that irrespective of the way that the Supreme Court might ultimately determine that case and whether or not this body ultimately passes an amendment to the Constitution, I would hope that by the dissemination of booklets like "Our Flag" and by the tremendous number of requests that all of us get for flags to be flown over the Capitol and for information on the flag like this booklet, I would hope that this would very soon drown out all the cries from those who would deface and burn our flag in an alleged attempt at free speech.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO].

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Indiana for the expeditious manner in which they have handled this legislation, bringing it before the House today.

Mr. Speaker, House Concurrent Resolution 311, which I introduced last month, recognizes the popularity of the booklet, "Our Flag," which I had the Joint Committee on Printing revise and update in the last Congress. It has been so well received that we are out of stock, and we need to reprint.

It is very important that this history of the American flag be in every school in every congressional district. We talk a lot about the flag, but we know little of its long and glorious history.

This is the flag that was authorized by the Second Continental Congress in 1777. This is the flag that flew over Fort McHenry, the flag that was carried at Gettysburg, at Belleau Wood, at Iwo Jima, that crossed the 39th parallel in Korea. This is the flag that flies over our Capitol and all public buildings, the flag that honors at half mast our fallen heroes and statesmen.

But, like so many of the honored and historic symbols of this great and free society—the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the Bill of Rights—our children do not know of the struggles and the victories of our democratic society.

We have forgotten to teach history and geography; studies tell us that our children do not know the names of the 13 original States, or the location of the capital of the United States, or the meaning of the Fourth of July. This grieves me, and it concerns me.

It may be that this book you authorize today will motivate some young person to study the origins of this Nation, and to look beyond the symbol of the flag to the democratic society that it represents.

George M. Cohan wrote:

It's a Grand Old Flag—a high flying flag
* * * * *
It's a symbol of the land we love
The home of the free and the brave.

We believe it, and we reaffirm it here in this Chamber every day when we pledge allegiance to our flag.

I urge all Members to vote aye on this resolution.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. BATES] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 311.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include therein extraneous material on House Concurrent Resolution 311, the concurrent resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER] will be recognized for 20 minuters.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill, H.R. 1028, authorizes the minting of commemorative coins to honor the 50th aniversary of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial. In the 50 years since Gutzon Borglum completed his sculpture in the Black Hills of South Dakota, Mount Rushmore has come to be one of the most recognizable symbols of freedom in the world. Thus, it is only appropriate that we honor the golden anniversary of this symbol on commemorative coins, which are meant to honor our highest ideals and achievements.

Over the past 50 years, more than 60 million people from all over the world have visited Mount Rushmore. Last year alone the memorial had over 2 million visitors. However, the facilities at Mount Rushmore have seen no substantial improvements or renovations in almost 25 years. The sales of the commemorative coins that this legislation authorizes would help fund badly needed renovations to the Mount Rushmore facility. Half of the surcharges raised by the sales of the coins would go to the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Society for renovation and expansion of Mount Rushmore's visitor facilities, and to preservation of the memorial itself. The other half of the surcharges would go toward reducing the national deficit. The provisions of this legislation would be enacted at no net cost to the Federal Government.

An amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 1028 was adopted without dissent as original text in our subcommittee markup of April 4. The amendment made technical changes to make H.R.1028 conform with previous commemorative legislation.

I want to thank the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] for his leadership on this legislation, and to acknowledge the very hard work done in acquiring the 218 cosponsors that are required by the Banking Committee for commemorative coin legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this is a noncontroversial bill that has bipartisan support. The amended bill was reported by our committee without dissent. I urge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise today in strong support of H.R. 1028, the 1991 Mount Rushmore Commemorative Coin Act.

I want to commend the House sponsor, Congressman JOHNSON, and the Senate sponsor, Senator PRESSLER, for the fine work they have done on this legislation. They have complied with all of the Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee rules and we truly appreciate their efforts. Also, Subcommittee Chairman LEHMAN and full Committee Chairman GONZALEZ should be commended for their efforts to bring this bill to the House floor in an expeditious manner.

H.R. 1028 represents relatively standard commemorative coin language and authorizes three coins to commemorate the 50th anniversary of Mount Rushmore. The Senate has previously passed S. 148 on November 3, 1989, and the House version makes minor changes to the Senate bill.

Section 2 of H.R. 1028 describes the coin specifications for the Mount Rushmore program. The mintage totals for the individual coins conform to suggestions made by the U.S. Mint. The bill calls for 500,000 gold coins, 2.5 million silver coins and 2.5 million clad coins. The House version deletes certain inscriptions required to be on the coins in the Senate bill. Testimony before our subcommittee indicated that individual coins may not have had the physical space to handle all the language required by the Senate bill. H.R. 1028 merely requires the standard inscriptions that appear on all coins be used at a minimum on the Mount Rushmore coins.

Section 3 of the bill prescribes sources of bullion to be used to mint the coins.

Section 4 of the bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall select the design of the coins after consultation with the Mount Rushmore Memorial Society and the Commission of Fine Arts.

Section 5 requires that a $35 surcharge be placed on all gold coins; a $7 surcharge on silver coins; and a $1 surcharge on clad coins.

Section 6 requires that the coins be issued only during 1991.

Section 7 is standard language waiving procurement regulations for the coin program.

Section 8 of the bill specifies how the proceeds from the surcharges are to be distributed; 50 percent of the surcharges will go to retire the national debt and 50 percent will go to benefit the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Society to improve, enlarge, and renovate the memorial.

Finally, section 11 requires that the coins be minted at no net cost to the Federal Government.

In closing let me say that I believe that using a commemorative coin program to preserve a national landmark such as Mount Rushmore is a worthy goal. I strongly support the legislation and urge its prompt passage by my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the prime mover behind this legislation, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the Mount Rushmore Commemorative Coin Act, H.R. 1028, is an integral part of a comprehensive plan to upgrade the visitor facilities at a National Park Service unit and preserve a treasured national landmark for future generations of Americans.

The Golden Anniversary Campaign, a private-sector initiative, will secure the majority of funds necessary to meet the present and anticipated needs at Mount Rushmore National Memorial. As an internationally recognized symbol of freedom and democracy, it is appropriate that State and Federal governments participate in this historic undertaking.

The Mount Rushmore Society was chartered as a nonprofit organization in the District of Columbia on February 24, 1930, to raise private moneys to finance construction of this national memorial.

Through sale of memberships, operation of concessions, and generating publicity for the massive mountain carving, the society amassed funds that when matched with Federal moneys, contributed greatly to early progress on the sculpture. In addition to raising funds for the actual carving of the memorial, the society has contributed to numerous projects since work was completed in 1941, including every major building project at Mount Rushmore. To date, the society also has supported three books, four films, foreign language translations, special events, and a library and research center that have helped Americans and foreign visitors understand the importance of a nation founded on the principles of freedom and democracy.

In the years immediately following construction of the memorial, the society reached a financial agreement with Congress in which concession revenues would be used to support facility improvements at the memorial. Funds were appropriated on a loan basis for construction of buildings, roads and other facilities. As of July 3, 1967, the entire sum of the loans made to the society totaling $750,358 were repaid to Congress ahead of schedule.

In addition to providing funds for the carving, the society continues to fulfill its original objectives: promotion of the arts; development and preservation of the memorial; providing support and assistance to the National Park Service and other governmental agencies which formulate long-range plans and policies for improvements at the memorial; providing financial assistance and adding promotional support to allow Mount Rushmore to remain a national shrine.

Sculptor Gutzon Borglum and his crews drilled, blasted and chiseled the four 60-foot-tall Presidential faces into their present state during 6½ years of work that occurred over a 14-year period ending in 1941. The sculpture depicting Presidents George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt constitutes the world's most gigantic piece of sculpture. Eight hundred million pounds of stone were removed in its carving, and so huge are the faces that from brow to chin each is as tall as the entire Great Sphinx of Egypt.

Located in the Black Hills of South Dakota, Mount Rushmore is as much a memorial to the deeds of four great Presidents as it is to the ideals and aspirations of the Nation they did so much to mold.

But now, nearly 50 years after Borglum's death and the beginning of World War II halted work on this colossal piece of sculpture, the National Park Service is faced with problems that consistently hamper its efforts to interpret the importance of the memorial, and may well threaten the structural integrity of Mount Rushmore.

More than 60 million visitors have traveled to Mount Rushmore since work began on the memorial. Today, more than six decades after its conception, the Nation's Shrine of Democracy is experiencing visitation levels in excess of 2 million per year.

With steadily increasing numbers of visitors, facilities, and interpretive exhibits have become outdated, undersized, and inadequate. The last significant improvements to those facilities were made more than a quarter century ago, when those facilities were designed to accommodate just 1 million visitors annually.

In addition to overtaxed facilities, extreme topography at the site of the memorial limits the enjoyment of many Americans and foreign visitors who travel to Mount Rushmore by precluding them from taking part in interpretive programs offered by the National Park Service. Many areas of the memorial, including its amphitheater and Sculptor's Studio, are not accessible to the handicapped. Indeed, in 1989, more than 42,000 visitors required transportation assistance merely to get from the parking lot to the memorial's View Terrace.

To help pay for badly needed renovation to accommodate these visitors, this legislation will call for commemorative coins to be issued which will recognize the golden anniversary of the memorial. Half of the surcharges from the sale of these coins will go toward improving the facilities at Mount Rushmore, and the other half will go toward reducing the national debt. This bill will provide for the issuance of $5, $1, and one-half dollar commemorative coins. All sales shall include a surcharge of $35 per coin for $5 coins, $7 per coin for the $1 coin, and $1 for the one-half dollar coin. The net proceeds could reach $37,500,000 if all 5,500,000 coins are sold. This means that there is a real possibility of raising $18,750,000 for the repairs and the same amount for deficit reduction.

The Senate has unanimously passed a nearly identical version of this proposal. I would urge my colleagues today to join me and well over 220 of our colleagues who have cosponsored this measure, to pass H.R. 1028. The administration has no objection.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not thank the chairman and ranking members of the Banking Committee, Mr. GONZALEZ and Mr. WYLIE, and the chairman and ranking members of the Subcommittee on Coinage and Consumer Affairs, Mr. LEHMAN and Mr. HILER for the consideration each has shown in their very helpful and expeditious handling of this bill.

The architectural and design firm of the Spencer Company from Palo Alto, California is currently at work developing a new Master Plan for Mount Rushmore. Remaining needs that will be considered for incorporation into the new Master Plan include:

Security system for the memorial;

Inner-transportation system;

Museum and theater;

Sealed chamber at the top of the mountain for historical records;

Repair of the memorial; and Sight and sound program.

The Mount Rushmore Society proposes to organize a national fund-raising campaign to raise forty million dollars to fund these sorely needed and long overdue improvements. In addition to this national fundraising effort, the Society will expand America's awareness of this memorial with a nationwide campaign that will tell the story of Mount Rushmore.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge my colleagues to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 1028, Mount Rushmore Commemorative Coin.

You might be curious as to why a Congressman from south Texas would be interested in a commemorative coin for Mount Rushmore. One of my constituents, Robin Carter, of Corpus Christi, is a descendent of the man who conceptualized Mount Rushmore back in 1925.

In 1925, Gutzon Borglum toured the Black Hills of South Dakota to help assess a tourist attraction for the State. Many people wanted the mountain to reflect the old "Wild West" heros. But Borglum wanted this to be a national monument, so he chose national leaders to immortalize there.

Mount Rushmore was completed in 1941 by Lincoln Borglum, Gutzon's son. The mountain was never dedicated, due to the beginning of the Second World War. Next year, Mount Rushmore will celebrate its 50th anniversary, and the commemorative coin will make its late dedication all the more significant to us all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill, H.R. 2761, authorizes the minting of a silver commemorative coin to honor the 50th anniversary of the United Services Organization.

The USO is a congressionally chartered agency, supported entirely by voluntary contributions, created to improve the morale and welfare of service members and their families throughout the world. The USO is not only Bob Hope entertaining the troops, but is a modern organization providing a variety of services for the military community at over 160 locations worldwide.

This commemorative coin recognizes the 50 years of service that the USO has provided while providing funds for the USO to help meet the future needs of servicemen. Half of the surcharges from this coin would be dedicated to the USO while the other half would go toward the reduction of the deficit.

An amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 2761 was adopted without dissent as original text in subcommittee markup on April 4, 1990. The amendment changes the bill to authorize only one silver coin which would be struck in a more limited quantity. This change was made so that the coinage program that this bill authorizes would not compete with another program authorized for the same year.

I want to thank Mr. RIDGE for his leadership and cooperation on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this is a noncontroversial bill that has bipartisan support. The amended bill was reported by our committee without dissent. I urge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the H.R. 2761, the United Services Organization's 50th Anniversary Commemorative Coin Act.

I want to commend the House sponsor, Congressman RIDGE, for the fine work that he has done on this legislation. He has complied with all of the Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee rules and we truly appreciate his efforts. As a member of the subcommittee, Congressman RIDGE's willingness to compromise has made this legislation possible today. Also, subcommittee chairman LEHMAN and full committee chairman GONZALEZ should be commended for their efforts to bring this bill to the House floor in an expeditious manner.

H.R. 2761 represents a limited edition coin program that I believe will be quite successful. The initial bill introduced by Congressman RIDGE authorized the issuance of three separate types of coins and provided for the minting of several million individual coins under this authorization. At subcommittee hearings on February 28, 1990, testimony indicated that marketing such a large amount of USO commemorative coins could be difficult for the mint. Therefore a compromise was struck whereby a single, limited edition silver coin is authorized by the bill. This is similar to the Eisenhower Coin Program currently being completed. The compromise featuring the limited edition coin is supported by veteran's groups and the administration. We are hoping that because of the limited edition, the USO coin will be an extremely popular coin program and an overwhelming success. Such a successful program could bolster the public response for future commemorative coin issues such as the Mount Rushmore Coin Program we have just authorized.

Examining the key components of the legislation, section 3 of H.R. 2761 describes the coin specifications for the USO Program. The bill authorizes a limited edition of 1 million silver coins.

Section 4 of the bill prescribes sources of silver bullion to be used to mint the USO coins.

Section 5 of the bill provides that the Secretary of Treasury shall select the design of the USO coin after consultation with the USO and the Commission of Fine Arts.

Section 6 requires that the coins be issued for 1 year beginning 6 months after date of enactment.

Section 7 requires that a $7 surcharge be placed on each of the silver coins sold.

Section 8 requires that the USO coins be minted at no net cost to the Federal Government.

Section 9 of the bill specifies how the proceeds from the surcharges are to be distributed. Fifty percent of the surcharges will go to retire the national debt and 50 percent will go to benefit the USO.

Finally, section 10 requires that certain reports to Congress be made by the Treasury.

I again want to compliment Congressman RIDGE on the pragmatic compromises he has made to make this legislation possible. I believe that this will be one of our most successful coin programs and I strongly urge my colleagues to promptly pass H.R. 2761.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE.]

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleagues on the Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, Chairman LEHMAN and Vice Chairman HILER, for their efforts in bringing this bill to the floor so promptly. I know there are many Members knocking on their door trying to promote commemorative coins and in their decisionmaking they have some tough choices. I am grateful for their willingness to work this one out with me, and I was pleased to compromise with them so that we could have a limited edition of this particular coin.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced this legislation because I believe in the work and efforts of the USO. The USO will celebrate its 50th anniversary on February 4, 1991, and this bill will commemorate that anniversary by requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to mint $1 silver coins. This bill has received strong bipartisan support and is cosponsored by 229 Members.

In 1941, President Roosevelt met with Prescott Bush and three other businessmen to consolidate the efforts and resources of six organizations and form one—the USO. The purpose of this new organization was to coordinate civilian war efforts so services were not duplicated or overlooked. The USO was thus formed and began its mission of meeting the off-duty needs of our soldiers.

Since 1941, the USO, a congressionally chartered agency which is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, has supplemented the Department of Defense efforts to improve the morale and welfare of service members and their families throughout the world. If the USO did not provide these continuing services, the Department of Defense would have to spend more American tax dollars to help with these needs. Passing this legislation today is one way for Congress to thank the USO for their tireless efforts on behalf of those young men and women in the military and their families.

Nearly one-half of the more than 2 million Americans in the Armed Forces today are in the lowest enlisted ranks, most are between 18 and 25 years old, and over 54 percent are married with children. Over 800,000 military personnel and their families are stationed abroad. This population has unique needs and stresses for which the USO continues to develop programs, touching individuals lives at the rate of 15,000 a day.

This Saturday, NBC will run a TV special starring Bob Hope, who is the Ambassador of Good Will for the USO. This special will feature Mr. Hope's latest USO tour. Bob Hope has been doing USO shows for the last 40 years. This is only one of the many examples of the USO endeavor to ensure that our young men and women overseas are not forgotten.

Although celebrity entertainment is the most popular and well-known USO Program, it is not the only one. At more than 160 locations worldwide, the USO meets the needs of the military community through airport centers that provide information about travel connections, hotel arrangements, emergency assistance, missing baggage location and translations; fleet centers that help sailors whose ships finally come into port after a long deployment on sea vessels, and their families with travel arrangements, currency exchange, translation, and emergency communications; family and community centers that help military families adjust to life in a new environment, both overseas and in the United States and orientation and intercultural programs that acquaint military families with the culture of their new country.

This bill is one way to show that America has not forgotten the USO and does care for all it has done over the past half century. The coins will represent both the past and future of the USO. They will be a reminder to veterans of times when they needed help during their military service and the USO responded. They will also be a symbol to all Americans that the USO is as alive and vital an organization today as it was 50 years ago, and still serving needs that are just as personal.

H.R. 2761 ensures that the minting and issuing of coins will not result in any net cost to the Federal Government. The surcharges received from the sale of coins minted will be divided between the USO and the Treasury. Fifty percent of the surcharges shall be promptly paid to the USO. Such amounts shall be used by the USO to fund the previously mentioned programs. The remaining 50 percent shall be transferred to the general fund of the Treasury for the sole purpose of reducing the national debt.

I would like to acknowledge the following organizations for their help and endorsement of the USO's 50th Anniversary Commemorative Coin Act: The Air Force Association; the American Legion; American Veterans of WWII, Korea, and Vietnam [AMVETS]; Association of the U.S. Army; Blinded Veterans Association; Disabled American Veterans; Jewish War Veterans of the United States of America, Inc.; Military Order of the Purple Heart of the U.S.A., Inc.; National Association of State Directors of Veterans Affairs; Navy League of the United States; Non-Commissioned Officers Association [NCOA]; Paralyzed Veterans of America; Polish Legion of American Veterans, USA; The Retired Officers Association; Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States; and the Vietnam Veterans of America, Inc.

The USO brings a piece of America to our service members overseas. To honor this organization for its unselfish work for the last 50 years, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the distinguished gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI], a member of the Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and thank him for his leadership, along with that of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER] in bringing this legislation to the floor as the ranking member of our subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in enthusiastic support for H.R. 2761, the USO commemorative coin bill.

Over the past 50 years, the USO has provided important services worldwide to improve the morale and welfare of service members and their families. What we commemorate here today with this commemorative coin, however, is not only the past but also the future.

The USO has made a significant difference in the lives of countless Americans serving this Nation since World War II. The need for the USO services continues. Today, over 800,000 military personnel and their families serve abroad. The USO, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] mentioned, provides essential supplemental services, including travel arrangements, et cetera, again as was mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE].

In a time when the global community is changing rapidly, the USO also provides orientation and intercultural programs to ease the transition of military families into their new situations and to ensure that everyone, including the people of the host country, obtains the maximum benefit from the intercultural exchange.

As a member of the House Banking Committee's Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, I am pleased to have been able to support the USO 50th anniversary commemorative coin bill.

This bill enjoys strong support in my district in San Francisco. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation to recognize the contributions of a truly worthy organization.

Happy anniversary to the USO.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2761, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include therein extraneous materials on H.R. 2761, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBBONS changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained in Connecticut this afternoon and missed one vote.

Had I been here, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall 108, condemning the Cuban Government for systematic harassment of Cuban human rights activists and calling upon them to meet internationally recognized human rights standards.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I regret that, due to unavoidable circumstances, I was unable to register my vote on House Resolution 381 (rollcall 108), relating to human rights abuses by the Government of Cuba. I am an original cosponsor and strong supporter of this legislation, and had I been present I would have voted "yes" on the resolution.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, when the House voted on House Resolution 381, the resolution condemning human rights abuses and imprisonment of human rights monitors in Cuba, I was unavoidably absent due to the budget summit negotiations. I believe House Resolution 381 is an important resolution; I supported it and I commend its sponsors. Had I been present, I would have voted for it.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall No. 108.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, I was en route to the House Chamber for a vote on House Resolution 381, but unfortunately, did not make it to the House floor before time had expired. I would like the record to show that had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall No. 108.

VOTE ON HOUSE RESOLUTION 381

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I was detained in White House budget meetings and was unable to vote on House Resolution 381, relating to human rights abuses by the Government of Cuba. Mr. Speaker, I would like to record to note that I was an original cosponsor of the resolution, and had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

AUTHORIZING 1990 SPECIAL OLYMPICS TORCH RELAY TO BE RUN THROUGH THE CAPITOL GROUNDS

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be discharged from further consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 286) authorizing the 1990 Special Olympics Torch Relay to be run through the Capitol grounds, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object, but I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation for an explanation of the resolution.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I also want to thank him for his cooperation on this concurrent resolution.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETRI. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland, who wants to make a brief statement.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the Members, I would like to make an announcement about our schedule for today, tomorrow, and Thursday.

Mr. Speaker, we expect to take up tomorrow morning the rule and the bill on the Americans With Disabilities Act. We expect the bill to be on the floor all day tomorrow, and Members ought to prepare for tomorrow and possibly on Thursday to meet relatively late in the evening. I do not have a time certain on that.

I have discussed this with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT], who has been working with me on behalf of the leadership on the Republican side of the aisle on the Americans With Disabilities Act. I do not have a specific time, but Members ought to plan to meet late tomorrow night and quite possibly Thursday night as well.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I have the time, and certainly I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would confirm that the gentleman form Mayland seems to be correct, except that the rule has not yet been adopted or proposed in the Rules Committee. There are some 30 to 40 amendments that have been filed, and there is a debate as to what kind of a rule we should have. I and others on our side have advocated an open rule. It is unclear as to the terms of the debate for the rule, but in any scenario, looking at the number of amendments that have been filed, Members should prepare for a late night Thursday night if this bill is going to be acted upon this week. The only other alternative would be to consider it next week, but some of the sponsors want to be sure that we act on it this week.

I would concur with the gentleman from Maryland that the Members should at least prepare for a possible late night tomorrow and perhaps a very late night on Thursday night if the legislation is going to be acted on this week.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETRI. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman from Maryland, if I may, is there any chance at all that this bill would go over and we would have a Friday session?

Mr. HOYER. I do not think so, no. Quite frankly, if we could not finish it Thursday night, I do not believe we would meet on Friday.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, so it is my understanding, though, that we very could have a situation where Members should prepare for Friday morning flights rather than Thursday evening flights; is that correct?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] is correct.

It is our perception on this side of the aisle, and I know the President is telling the White House they want to get this bill through this week as well, and I believe there is no reason we cannot finish the bill by Thursday in any event, but, if perchance we did not finish it, which we do not think will be the case, we think it will get finished by Thursday night sometime. But we will not be meeting on Friday.

Mr. WALKER. In addition, there is no thinking about putting the bill over until next week?

Mr. HOYER. No.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON], the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, for yielding.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, House Concurrent Resolution 286 authorizes the 1990 Torch Relay for the Special Olympics to be run through the Capitol grounds as part of its journey to the District of Columbia Special Olympics spring games at Gallaudet University. This would occur on May 18, 1990, or on such other date as the Speaker of the House and the President pro tempore of the Senate may jointly designate.

Mr. Speaker, currently there is a law prohibiting open flames on the Capitol grounds. This is to guard against a possible fire. Because of this, Congress has passed special legislation the past 3 years so that the Olympic Torch could be carried through the Capitol grounds.

Again, this year, as in the past, a torch-lighting ceremony will begin the relay of law enforcement officers from the steps of the Capitol, through the District, concluding at Gallaudet University. The goal is to show law enforcement's support for Special Olympics and to raise money for the games.

Mr. Speaker, adoption of this resolution is a very positive step toward promoting interest in the Special Olympics and I urge its passage.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I want to express my support for this resolution authorizing the 1990 Special Olympics Torch Relay to be run through the Capitol grounds later this week. For the past several years, Congress has authorized the running of the torch relay, which has become the symbolic opening of the D.C. Special Olympics.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution which would authorize the 1990 Special Olympics Torch Relay to be run through the Capitol grounds later this week.

The torch relay has become the traditional opening of the D.C. Special Olympics. The torch will be carried from the Capitol to Gallaudet University, which is the site of the D.C. Special Olympics spring games.

I want to commend Congressman NORM LENT, the sponsor of this resolution, for his continuing support for the Special Olympics.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to approve this resolution today.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in supporting House Concurrent Resolution 286, which authorizes the annual law enforcement run marking the start of the U.S. Special Olympics on May 18. I'd like to thank my distinguished colleagues on the Public Works and Transportation Committee, for their help in bringing the legislation to the House floor in such a timely fashion.

The event begins with a torch-lighting ceremony that will be held on the steps of the U.S. Capitol. From there, a relay of law enforcement officers will run from the Capitol, continue on a designated route through the District of Columbia, and finish at the Gallaudet University where the Special Olympics will be held.

The goal of the relay is to show law enforcement's support for the Special Olympics games and to help raise financial assistance to continue this worthwhile program for physically challenged individuals.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 286

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring),

SECTION 1. AUTHORIZATION OF RUNNING OF SPECIAL OLYMPICS TORCH THROUGH CAPITOL GROUNDS.

On May 18, 1990, or on such other date as the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate may designate jointly, the 1990 Special Olympics Torch Relay may be run through the Capitol Grounds, as part of the journey of the Special Olympics torch to the District of Columbia Special Olympics spring games at Gallaudet University in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. RESPONSIBILITY OF CAPITOL POLICE BOARD.

The Capitol Police Board shall take such action as may be necessary to carry out section 1.

SEC. 3. CONDITIONS RELATING TO PHYSICAL PREPARATIONS.

The Architect of the Capitol may prescribe conditions for physical preparations for the event authorized by section 1.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the concurrent resolution just adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXPRESSING APPRECIATION OF CONGRESS TO THE FRIENDS OF THE NATIONAL ARBORETUM

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be discharged from further consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 117), expressing the appreciation of Congress for the contributions of the Friends of the National Arboretum in providing for the preservation and public display of 22 of the original columns of the east front portico of the United States Capitol Building, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object, however I yield at this time to the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON], the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, for an explanation of the resolution.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, Senate Concurrent Resolution 117 expresses the gratitude of the Congress to the Friends of the National Arboretum and those individuals who aided in the effort to preserve and display the Capitol's original sandstone Corinthian columns at the National Arboretum. There are 22 of these columns that were removed during the late 1950's. The dedication of the new display of the columns is scheduled to take place on June 14.

The Friends of the National Arboretum is a nonprofit, volunteer organization that works to support the efforts of the National Arboretum. It is appropriate for us to take this opportunity to thank them for their successful efforts in preserving this part of our American heritage.

I urge adoption of this resolution.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] for his explanation, and I would like to add my words of support for this legislation expressing the appreciation of the Congress for the efforts of the Friends of the National Arboretum, and many others, to preserve 22 Corinthian columns which in the past supported the east portico of the Capitol.

The columns were first installed as part of the reconstruction efforts following the War of 1812. The columns stood for close to 130 years until the east portico was expanded in 1958. The 22 columns, each one 30 feet tall and constructed from a single piece of sandstone, have been restored and are now permanently displayed at the National Arboretum.

I would ask that the House approve this resolution today.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my support for this resolution expressing appreciation to the Friends of the National Arboretum and others whose financial support has ensured that 22 Corinthian columns which once supported the east portico of the Capitol will be preserved.

These columns are now on permanent display at the National Arboretum after deteriorating for 25 years in Government storage facilities. The 30-foot sandstone columns were installed during the reconstruction of the Capitol following the War of 1812, and remained until the 1958 expansion of the east front of the Capitol.

Thanks to the efforts of the Friends of the National Arboretum, these columns now stand in a plaza at the Arboretum, to be enjoyed by all visitors. I would ask that the House approve this resolution today.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate concurrent resolution, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 117

Whereas the Capitol Building of the United States symbolizes the enduring success of the American system of representative democracy;

Whereas on-going construction of this magnificent building, which began nearly two centuries ago and continued until recently, has mirrored the geographic expansion of the United States;

Whereas the original Corinthian sandstone columns that stood for more than 130 years on the East Front Portico of the Capitol Building were replaced during the extension of the East Front of the Capitol Building in the late 1950's;

Whereas 22 of those columns have been preserved and made available for public display at the National Arboretum in the Nation's Capital through the initiative and determined efforts of the Friends of the National Arboretum, a nonprofit, volunteer organization that supports the efforts of the National Arboretum; and

Whereas these historically significant columns will be dedicated at the National Arboretum on Flag Day, June 14, 1990: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress extends its deep appreciation to the Friends of the National Arboretum and those individuals whose financial contributions have helped ensure that 22 of the original sandstone Corinthian columns which were removed from the East Front Portico of the Capitol Building during the extension of the East Front of the Capitol Building in the late 1950's will be permanently preserved and publicly displayed at the National Arboretum.

The Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate concurrent resolution just adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

TAKE PRIDE IN AMERICA MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 508) designating May 1990 as "Take Pride in America Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, within the reservation I would like to yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SKEEN], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Joint Resolution 508, a bill which designates the month of May as Take Pride in America Month. I appreciate the support of the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] for his help in passing this resolution.

As American citizens we own almost 40-percent of our country. These lands including forest, parks, wildlife preserves, beaches, city parks, playgounds, and historic monuments are managed by Federal, State, and local government agencies.

Although most people take pride in our lands, others act as if the lands belong to "everyone" and "no one" has the responsibility to care for them.

Unfortunately, many of these national treasures have been subjected to careless misuses and deliberate abuse by visitors to these sites. Some of the abuses are malicious and blatantly destructive, like defacing a statute in a public park.

Other actions are thoughtless behavior, such as littering, or plucking flowers from community flowerbeds. Either way, the costs are significant. And sadly, some of the damage is irreparable. In fact, more than 80-percent of the prehistoric ruins in the Southwest have been vandalized, looted or damaged. And the National Park Service reports that vandalism costs park and recreation agencies more than $50 million per year.

As this Nation has grown and become more industrialized and urbanized, many people have forgotten or never learned about how to care for the land and leave it better for those who follow. That is the primary goal of the "Take Pride in America" campaign—a partnership of public and private organizations committed to educating our country's citizens on the wise use of the resources that belong to all Americans. The "Take Pride" program seeks to promote stewardship of our public lands, artifacts and historical monuments.

In every State, volunteers are involved in a broad spectrum of grassroots activities including outdoor stewardship and self-policing programs, and hotlines to report vandalism, wildlife poaching, theft and other destructive activities. Others help care for parks, highways, trails, shorelines, campsites and playgrounds through cleanup, maintenance and general assistance when needed.

It is that kind of volunteer support that "Take Pride in America" month will salute. I'm pleased that a majority of this distinguished body has taken this moment to recognize the efforts of the thousands of volunteers in the "Take Pride" program, by declaring the month of May as "Take Pride in America" month.

Mr. Speaker, one of the daily newspapers in my district, the Alamogordo Daily News, recently wrote an editorial in support of "Take Pride in America" month, and explained activities of citizens of Otero County in support of the "Take Pride" program. I include it for the RECORD.

Americans have been blessed with a beautiful, abundant land and a rich cultural heritage. If future generations are to share in these blessings, we must take an active role in preserving them.

[From the Alamogordo (NM) Daily News, Mar. 27, 1990]

"IT'S TIME TO TAKE CARE OF TREASURES"

It's no secret that Otero County is rich in natural treasure. The mountains, forest and the White Sands make Otero rich in a special way.

Many congressmen, including Rep. Joe Skeen, are trying to spur Americans to protect the natural treasure in Otero and in the rest of the nation. A joint resolution is being introduced in Congress to make the month of May "Take Pride in America" month.

"Americans have been blessed with a beautiful, abundant land and a rich cultural heritage," said Skeen. "If future generations are to share in these blessings, we must take an active role in preserving them."

Many of our national treasures, according to Skeen, have been subjected to careless misuses and deliberate abuse by visitors to these sites. Some of these abuses are malicious and blatantly destructive, like defacing a statue in a public park. Other actions are thoughtless behavior, such as littering, or plucking flowers from community flowerbeds.

Skeen also reminds us that more than 200 incidents of archaeological vandalism to U.S. Forest Service land were documented in 1985 alone. The National Park Service reports that vandalism costs park and recreational agencies more than $50 million per year.

Skeen says "Take Pride in America" promotes a partnership of public and private organizations committed to educating our country's citizens on the wise use of the resources that belong to all Americans.

Several groups in Otero are already involved in projects to preserve our resources. "Take Pride in America" has the potential to urge others to get involved in preserving our national treasures. It may also help remind those careless in the past to be more responsible with those treasures in the future.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, last month, millions of Americans celebrated Earth Day. The Take Pride in America resolution, House Joint Resolution 508, also celebrates the love we have for this wonderful land.

People across the country make sacrifices everyday in the name of protecting the environment. Indeed, our Nation, blessed with some of the world's natural treasures, has a rich history of natural resource protection and preservation.

Now, as we approach the next century, large-scale consumer conservation and recycling movements are helping to ease burdens on our Nation's natural resources. It is my hope that protection of sensitive areas and environmental activism will continue to gain popular support. I receive letters from proud Americans hailing from all parts of this great country who are committed to preserving our natural heritage.

Mr. Speaker, we have much to be thankful for, from the natural wonders within our borders to the willingness of the American public to step in and help preserve them.

I join my colleagues in taking pride in America.

□ 1520

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCNULTY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 508

Whereas the United States is blessed with outstanding natural and cultural resources;

Whereas the United States is blessed with tremendous human resources, including citizens with a unique volunteer spirit rooted in the Nation's frontier tradition;

Whereas the Nation's recreational and cultural resources contribute to its economic and social well-being;

Whereas the future of the Nation's great historical monuments, natural wonders, and public lands depends upon the commitment of the American people to their preservation;

Whereas the Take Pride in America Campaign is a partnership of Federal agencies, States, and numerous public and private organizations committed to the wise use of our natural and cultural resources;

Whereas Take Pride in America Month will focus attention on the stewardship of public lands by concerned citizens and citizens groups around the Nation; and

Whereas "Take Pride in America: You Can Make a World of Difference" will be the theme for Take Pride in America Month: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 1990 is designated as "Take Pride in America Month", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTONIAN, LATVIAN, AND LITHUANIAN GOVERNMENTS OBSERVE RECOGNITION

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous material.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting into the RECORD an article from the May issue of Reader's Digest. The June issue is already on the stand, so people may have to borrow the May issue from a friend or get it from the public library. But I would wish that every American citizen would read the article by the Reader's Digest staff on the Katyn Forest massacre, in what is now part of the Soviet Union, but what was then part of Poland.

I just want to read the opening paragraph, because it sheds great insight on the Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia cries for freedom, and their efforts to regain the independence they lost with the signing of the Hitler-Stalin pact by the two greatest murderers in the history of all civilization.

"Fifty years ago this spring, 15,570 Polish military officers and men held in Soviet prisoner of war camps vanished without a trace. For three years the Polish wartime government, exiled in London, joined anguished familes in the search for the men. Their efforts were in vain until 1943, when the invading German Army"—who themselves were covererd with blood and had commited atrocities—"announced the discovery of the massed graves near the Russian town of Katyn. Thus began a disclosure of one of the most abominable episodes of World War II, a tragedy that continues" to this day, "to send political shock waves through Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union."

Without Stalin, who Gorbachev tells us is the world's greatest murderer, without Hitler, without these two signing the bloodiest pact in all of time, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania would have not been oppressed by first communism, then nazism, then communism again. I believe the United States and all freedom-loving countries should recognize the new governments of each of these countries.

KATYN: ANATOMY OF A MASSACRE

(By Rudolph Chelminski)

(Fifty years ago this spring, 15,570 Polish military officers and men held in Soviet prisoner-of-war camps vanished without a trace. For three years the Polish wartime government, exiled in London, joined anguished families in the search for the men. Their efforts were in vain until 1943, when the invading German army announced the discovery of mass graves near the Russian town of Katyn (kah-TEEN). Thus began the disclosure of one of the most abominable episodes of World War II, a tragedy that continues to send political shock waves through Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

Reader's Digest Roving Editor Rudolph Chelminski has nurtured a deep interest in the massacre at Katyn ever since he first heard of it as a boy from his Polish-born father. To tell the story of the Katyn butchery, he interviewed sources in the United States, France, England, Poland and the Soviet Union. This is what he found.)

Early in February 1943, a Russian peasant named Ivan Krivozertsev stomped into the office of Lt. Ludwig Voss of the German occupation forces in the hamlet of Gniezdovo, 230 miles southwest of Moscow. Krivozertsev had a stunning piece of news. He said there were bodies, thousands of them, buried nearby: Polish prisoners of war, murdered by Soviet authorities.

"They lie here," he announced. "Shot at Goat Hill."

Voss packed Krivozertsev and two other locals into a horse-drawn cart, along with picks and shovels, and took them into the section of the Katyn Forest called Kozy Gory (Goat Hill). It was common knowledge in the area that the 27-year-old Krivozertsev harbored no love for the Soviets. They had nationalized his family's farm, and jailed and finally executed his father.

Soon German-army teletypes rattled out an urgent message for Berlin: mass graves had been discovered. The burial pits were piled with bodies of Polish military troops dressed in winter uniforms and high leather boots. Many wore combat decorations. Almost all had been shot in the head.

From March to June, the Germans laid open the site. They tagged the decomposing bodies and searched them for identification papers. They also removed 22 diaries and some 3300 letters and newspapers, as well as Bibles and odd sums of Russian rubles and Polish zlotys.

In the presence of as many observers as they could muster, the Germans then carried out postmortem examinations. According to their official report, the shots were almost always fired into the nape of the neck. Generally one shot had been fired, the bullet piercing the occipital bone close to the lower part of the skull and exiting the forehead, near the hairline.

World War II had begun in September 1939, when Hitler's armies swept into Poland from the west and, 17 days later, the Soviets invaded from the east. By the end of the month, Poland was defeated, her cities smashed and her land split between the U.S.S.R. and the Third Reich. The Soviets held 250,000 Polish prisoners. Almost immediately they shipped the officers and specialists to three prison camps—Kozielsk, Ostashkov and Starobielsk—directed by the NKVD, forerunner of today's KGB. Some of the enlisted men were executed, but most were simply shunted to labor camps deep inside the U.S.S.R.

Those in the three prison camps, however, posed a special problem. They were the "upper class," a category particularly loathsome to Marxist ideology. Most were not professional soldiers, but reservists. Doctors, lawyers, judges, professors, scientists, clerics—they were the Polish nation's leaders and thinkers.

Through the long winter of 1939-40 the prisoners endured cold and semi-starvation in filthy, lice-infested quarters. They were individually interrogated by NKVD agents, who untiringly probed their backgrounds, personal inclinations and political views. Their interrogators were governed entirely by Marxist dogma. For such fanatics, war was a struggle not between nations but between classes. And class enemies were, by definition, enemies of the Soviet Union.

Of the 15,570 men held in the three camps, only 448 were spared—the NKVD probably decided they would be useful in the struggle for a new world under Soviet dictator Joseph Stalin. The rest were considered irredeemable. Far from feeling remorse or willingness to be re-educated, they held prayer meetings in their barracks, sang hymns and the Polish anthem, and even celebrated clandestine Masses—a strictly forbidden activity.

Early in April 1940, most likely on orders from Moscow, the NKVD began emptying the camps. In groups of 50 to 400, the "enemies of the people" were taken to railheads and put aboard prison trains for destinations unknown. The most insistent rumor, planted and encouraged by the NKVD, held that they would be returned to Poland. "All of you will meet again soon," they were assured as they strode out of the gates. For once, the NKVD was speaking the truth.

It is not easy to make 15,000 soldiers disappear into thin air. You cannot kill them all at once. Firing machine guns into a crowd is impractical and messy, leaving too many chances for survival or even escape.

Individual killing is best, then, but this requires preparation and attention to detail. The men must never suspect what lies in store for them, or they might attempt rebellion. They are already weakened and sick from the camps' meager rations, but you weaken them further by giving them next to nothing to eat during the two-day rail journey, and you cow them with even more brutal treatment than usual. Last, you take them from the train to the place of execution in small batches—30 or 40 at a time. Then you shoot them, one by one, at the edge of the pits.

Yesterday a convoy of senior officers left, wrote Lt. Waclaw Kruk in his diary. Three generals, 20 to 25 colonels and about the same number of majors. We were in the best of spirits, because of the manner of their departure. Today my turn came.

The date was April 8, 1940. On the train, Kruk began to have misgivings. Then the misgivings turned to dread.

At the station we were loaded into prison cars under strict guard. Now we are waiting to depart. Optimistic as I was before, I'm now coming to the conclusion that this journey does not bode well.

Waclaw Kruk's diary was found in 1943 near a body that was tagged No. 424.

Maj. Adam Solski, tagged body No. 490, was a professional soldier. The last entry in his diary, dated Tuesday, April 9, probably was written 20 minutes or so before he died.

A few minutes before five in the morning: reveille in the prison train. Preparing to get off. We are to go somewhere by car. What next? Five o'clock: ever since dawn, the day has run an exceptional course. Departure in prison van with tiny cell-like compartments (horrible). Driven somewhere into the woods. Something like a holiday place. Here a detailed search. I was relieved of my watch, which showed 6:30 a.m., asked for my wedding ring. Rubles, belt and pocket knife taken away.

Goat Hill was indeed a holiday place. The NKVD maintained a dacha there, a large guest house on the banks of the Dnieper River. Since 1931, officers had come for weekends and family vacations. Now the death teams were housed in the dacha. It was convenient, affording them only a short walk to work.

One of the most striking features of the NKVD killing system was the sophisticated and distinctly Russian binding method found on many of the corpses. The victim's hands were first tied behind his back. Then, with a second cord, his great-coat was tied over his head at neck level. From the neck, the cord was passed down the back, looped around the bound hands and tied again at the neck. The prisoner, his hands now pulled up toward his shoulder blades, was unstable to offer any resistance. Every move of his arms only tightened the noose around his neck.

Still, many struggled at the end. Their bodies were found stabbed, with the cruciform wounds characteristic of the four-cornered Russian bayonet.

How soon did they know? If Solski hadn't caught on at 6:30 when they took his wedding ring, when did he finally realize? Didn't they hear the pistol shots? Couldn't they even smell the others in the pit?

Adam Macedonski, an artist now living in Krakow, retains a terrifying childhood memory of the Russian invasion: "I saw a prisoner being led through town for execution. He had his hands tied behind his back and there were eight NKVD men around him: two front and back, two on either side, all with their bayonets pushed against him. He couldn't make a move. It must have been like that in Katyn."

Solski may have suspected nothing until he reached the pit, because it was his fate to arrive early in the morning, when the NKVD's workday was just beginning. Those who arrived later probably did hear shooting, but they could do nothing. By then they were either tied up or squatting in the steel boxes of the Chorny Voron (Black Raven)—the special bus used to transport prisoners. They must have listened to the pistol shots and awaited their turns like sheep in an abattoir.

Chorny Voron had been well known to the Soviets for years. An NKVD invention, it had the advantage of totally immobilizing a man until it was time for him to be killed. Another prisoner, who was not marked for death but once rode such a bus, has left a graphic description: "A narrow corridor ran up the center, with many low and narrow doors on both sides. When a prisoner stepped in, he was ordered to back into one of the compartments. These were unlit and so small that one had to crouch."

Everything was well planned. Katyn was cold, professional, assembly-line work, repeated thousands of times. The executioners, it seems, even had assistants who reloaded the .30-caliber, eight-shot semi-automatic pistols and passed over fresh ones when those in use overheated.

For nearly six weeks, day in and day out, the NKVD got on with the job: tie him up as you yank him out of the Chorny Voron, smash him with your rifle butt or stick him with the bayonets if he struggles. Then march him up to the pit and do it. As for the actual executioners, many doubtless disappeared soon after the massacre, in line with classical NKVD tradition: there is nothing like a bullet in the back of the head to silence a potentially bothersome witness.

While it was all very efficient, however, Stalin soon had occasion to regret Katyn. Just over a year after the massacre, Hitler turned on the U.S.S.R. Stalin abruptly switched from an accomplice of Hitler to an ally of Great Britain in the fight to the death against the Nazis.

Unstoppable at first, the Wehrmacht eventually bogged down in the Russian vastness. By the winter of 1943, the main German forces found themselves trapped and surrounded. It was then that Ivan Krivozertsev suddenly appeared with his startling information about Goat Hill.

The Germans quickly recognized their macabre discovery as a propaganda bombshell: one Allied government had slaughtered nearly half the officer corps of another! Hitler personally directed Goebbels and Himmler to give the Katyn case top priority. It was the prefect smoke screen for the actions of his SS troops, which were systematically annihilating residents of the Jewish ghetto in Warsaw.

The Germans invited three separate commissions into Katyn to examine the corpses. The first, a medical-judiciary group, was entirely German. The second, made up of 12 forensic scientists and pathologists, represented countries as diverse as Belgium, Switzerland, Hungary and Bulgaria. The third, all-Polish, consisted of 12 medical experts from the Red Cross of German-occupied Poland. The Germans even brought four Allied officers who had been plucked from their own P.O.W. camps. One was a young American, an infantry lieutenant colonel named John Van Vliet, Jr.

Now retired in Florida, Van Vliet vividly recalls the day in late April 1943 when he was asked to serve on a "board of inquiry." Sensing a propaganda exercise and knowing his rights under the Geneva Convention, he flatly refused. The German camp commandant responded by bringing in an armed squad with fixed bayonets. The request had become an order.

En route to Katyn, the four P.O.W. officers agreed to say nothing to any journalists, to speak into no microphones and to express no opinions whatever. "I hated the Germans," Van Vliet explains. "I didn't want to believe them."

In Katyn, they were shown three partially excavated graves with about 300 bodies laid out beside one of them, some with hands tied behind their backs. In the pits themselves, the bodies were stacked "like cordwood," face down, Van Vliet remembers.

With calm dignity, they viewed the stinking piles of bodies and the documents pulled from them. The single concession they made to the Germans was to accept the Egyptian cigarettes they offered; the strong tobacco helped mask the stench. To their surprise, the Germans never asked them to sign or record statements; their mere presence was enough.

The P.O.W. group was revolted by the butchery, and a few hours on the site convinced them there could be only one explanation. The winter uniforms, the lack of wear on the clothing and boots, the saplings planted to hide the death pits, the diaries, newspapers, letters and cards dated no later than May 1940—everything pointed clearly to death in the spring of 1940. And Katyn had been in Russian hands until the summer of 1941.

For ten weeks, the Germans continued the grisly dig. By the beginning of June, when the advancing Red Army became a menace, they had exhumed the remains of 4143 Polish officers. Every positively identified body corresponded to a prisoner from Kozielsk. The other 11,000 men from Starobielsk and Ostashkov were still unaccounted for.

Stunned and outraged, the Polish Government in Exile in London began to battle for the truth as soon as the Germans announced their find. In 1943, however, the Red Army was a crucial element of the struggle against Nazi Germany, and the Allies feared Stalin might drop out of the fray and negotiate a separate peace. Anything that bothered the Soviet side and could lend comfort to German propaganda was therefore unthinkable and unspeakable. If anyone was to be blamed for the Katyn massacre, it could by only the Nazis. Katyn was nothing but a German plot, insisted President Roosevelt.

"We must not take sides in the Russo-Polish quarrel," Winston Churchill instructed his cabinet, as he assured Stalin that he would do his best to silence Free Polish newspapers in London. Far less duped by the Soviets than Roosevelt was, Churchill nonetheless felt obliged to practice diplomacy regarding Katyn.

The day Katyn was recaptured by the Soviets, Moscow brought its own investigative group to Kozy Gory. It was called the Special Commission for Ascertaining and Investigating the Circumstances of the Shooting of Polish Officer Prisoners by the German-Fascist Invaders in the Katyn Forest.

The Soviets concluded, of course, that Katyn was the work of the Germans, but their report was so short, shoddy and riddled with error that it never commanded any credence outside the U.S.S.R. and its satellites. The report claimed that the Germans had shot the Poles in August and September of 1941—ignoring the fact that the bodies were dressed in winter uniforms.

After Stalin's death, through the regimes of Khrushchev and his successors, all the way up to the reform-minded Gorbachev, the adamant refusal to admit guilt has continued, Katyn went into the Memory Hole—as if it had never happened.

In Poland, the force of the Soviet-imposed taboo was so strong that people could lose their jobs or apartments for merely mentioning the banned word. Ewa Solska, Major Solski's daughter, now a high-school teacher near Warsaw, discovered this while a student at Warsaw University. Asked to fill out a form including information about her father, she wrote "killed at Katyn." She was expelled from the university.

The immediate postwar years were cold and pitiless in Poland, and the wives and children of Katyn victims were treated like pariahs. Their husbands and fathers were scorned as class enemies. Already the shame of the Soviet Union, Katyn became the shame of Poland as well.

Sadly, the truth was no more welcome in the West. Jozef Czapski, a Polish officer who survived the Soviet P.O.W. camps, journeyed to the United States after the war, and was invited to appear on the Voice of America. VOA officials, apparently under orders from the State Department, cut his every reference to Katyn.

On his release from captivity, Lt. Col. Van Vliet dictated a report on Katyn and personally handed it to Maj. Gen. Clayton Bissel, then assistant chief of staff in charge of army intelligence (G-2). Bissel promptly classified the report top secret. "I saw in it great possibilities for embarrassment," Bissel later testified. This prevented Van Vliet from discussing it. Then the report simply disappeared.

In 1949 the Defense Department asked Van Vliet to dictate his report once again, and it was released the next year. A select committee of the U.S. Congress then conducted an exhaustive 13-month investigation of Katyn in 1951 and 1952, yielding 2362 pages of testimony, and concluded that beyond any reasonable doubt the crime had been committed by the NKVD.

If this verdict honored Congress, it was thoroughly unwelcome at the United Nations, where the Soviet Union now enjoyed enormous influence. The U.N. promptly shelved the findings.

It is a hard destiny to be born Polish, Major Solski had written in his prison dairy.

As matters turned out, it was not easy to be Ivan Krivozertsev either. The man who had first alerted the Germans to the slaughter feared for his own life from the moment the Red Army swept into hearby Smolensk. He made his way as far west as possible, eventually reaching England. He assumed the name Michal Loboda and settled near Bristol. On October 30, 1947, he was found hanging in a toolshed in an orchard. The local coroner ruled his death a suicide. Those familiar with the NKVD believe he was murdered.

For almost five decades, the Polish communists kept the lid on the Katyn question. Not until 1987, when faced with nationwide unrest, did Polish authorities form a commission with their Russian counterparts to examine the "blank spots" in Polish-Soviet history.

The commission dallied and deliberated without reaching any conclusions. After the Solidarity-led government came to power in Warsaw in 1989; the prime minister officially asked the U.S.S.R. to acknowledge the crime committed at Katyn.

Moscow never replied. Not even Gorbachev, so active in denouncing Stalin's other crimes, felt strong enough to avow the greatest single massacre of prisoners of war in modern history.

Once, a hint of the truth inadvertently escaped a high Soviet official. It happened in October 1940, when Gen. Vsevolod N. Merkulov, deputy head of the NKVD, was interviewing one of the rare communist sympathizers found among the captured Poles. This officer, a Lt. Col. Zygmunt Berling, was being groomed as a possible leader of a future Polish communist army. But even a turncoat needs an officer corps, and when Berling asked for the men in the prison camps, Merkulov's face twitched.

"No, not those," he blurted. "We made a big mistake concerning them."

I went to Katyn last fall to see where it all happened. After a short drive from Smolensk over a pot-holed road, I easily located the Katyn woods. The entire forest is surrounded by a high iron fence, and entry is forbidden except within a small open spot near the road. The forest is typically Russian, with thick evergreens shouldering up against the delicate white fingers of birch stands, and a lush ground cover of gorse and green moss.

With a group of Polish pilgrims, I walked to the clearing where a flagstone plaza, a shoulder-high stone wall and four severe rectangles of grass served as a memorial. "To the victims of Fascism," read twin black plaques in Russian and Polish. "Polish officers shot by the Nazis in 1941."

"You know that's the wrong date, don't you?" one of the Poles asked me. "The communists even put 1941 on the Katyn memorial in Warsaw. Can you imagine?"

Surreptitiously, a few pilgrims scooped up little clods of wet earth. Returned to Poland, those bits of soil would become venerated relics for some parish church, symbols to keep the memory alive.

In September 1988, Soviet authorities had permitted a Polish church group to install a high wooden cross at Kozy Gory. Now, as I stood where hundreds of candles flickered and a delegation of priests from Warsaw intoned a memorial Mass, the fence barring us from the forest beyond loomed like an intolerable affront. It was oppressive and suffocating, and I was seized by the determination to go into that forest, beyond the fence. To escape.

My Soviet guide was perplexed by my insistence, but he made phone calls, and 24 hours later I was granted a favor that, he assured me, no other Western visitor had ever received. The gate was thrown open.

For an hour I tramped aimlessly through the forest under a chilly drizzle, trying to picture it in 1940. No doubt the trees would have been about the same, as new growth succeeds old in nature's perpetual rebirth. It was probably colder when the first victims arrived, but later in April the temperature would have been the same as now. The dripping branches hung heavy with water, and the horizon fused into a misty haze. All black and green, the Katyn Forest was utterly silent. But in my head I heard the screams and pistol shots.

The Polish pilgrims at Kozy Gory had no doubt that the Soviet Union would eventually be forced to confess—and not merely for the 4000-plus victims at Katyn, but for the 11,000 others from the Ostashkov and Starobielsk camps, who were never found. Where did their murders take place?

"We may never know for sure," said Louis Fitz-Gibbon, British author of several books on Katy. "The U.S.S.R. is full of mass graves. The Soviets killed a lot more of their own people, even though this was a special case."

The vast plains and steppes of the Soviet Union are indeed drenched in blood. Today, scholars put the total number of Stalin's victims in the tens of millions.

But the Poles will always remember Katyn as the place where their nation was symbolically put to death. Famed Polish movie director Andrzej Wajda, whose father was murdered at Katyn, has completed a film on the massacre. "I would be doing this even if my father had not been among the victims," he said. "Sooner or later, we are going to force recognition of what really happened. For my father and for all the others. For Poland. For the truth."

Mikhail Gorbachev has shown strength of character in denouncing Stalinist crimes against his own people. Today, at the 50th anniversary of the killings at Katyn, the time is ripe to do the same for Stalin's Polish victims. Without further delay, the Soviets should speak these simple words: Yes, we did it. We are eternally sorry.

Only then will the tragic story of the Katyn massacre begin to end.

PRIVATE GRIFFIN STORY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, one of my constituents called to express how upset he was over the Army's treatment of PV2 James Griffin III.

We have all been outraged for sometime and so today I am pleased to tell what we could not tell our constituents yesterday, but can tell everyone today—that a satisfactory resolution of the first stage of this serious affair has been reached.

The inspector general of the Department of Defense has informed me and allowed me to make public that PV2 James Griffin III now has an honorable discharge from the Army.

We normally kick around the media, but the credit for the resolution of James Griffin's discharge belongs to them, specifically to Mike Wallace and Charlie Thompson of "60 Minutes." In turn, Charlie Thompson, the producer, suggested that I request the inspector general to investigate the matter.

The story of PV2 James Griffin III and his torture by the Honduran police was presented to the public only through those efforts of Mike Wallace, who is a superb reporter, and Charlie Thompson, the excellent producer of the show.

Having been a reporter for a news service, a wartime correspondent in Vietnam and the maritime labor editor of the Baltimore Sun—I know the effort and personal dedication that it took for them to bring this story out.

When they came to me I was pleased to be included in such an important effort to help a young soldier.

BENTLEY ANNOUNCES DOD INVESTIGATIVE DECISION IN THE CASE OF PRIVATE GRIFFIN

Today I am announcing that the inspector general of the Department of Defense, Susan Crawford, has written me that she is recommending to the Secretary of the Army that Mr. James Griffin III, formerly PV2 Griffin, be given an honorable discharge.

Mrs. Crawford's recommendations are part of the report—released to me yesterday—of an investigation conducted by her office, upon my request, into the circumstances surrounding the surrender of Mr. Griffin to Honduran police for questioning over the loss of his rifle.

The report also recommends a Department of the Army investigation as to how the officers involved received outstanding performance evaluations of their tour of duty in Honduras without any permanent record of letters of reprimand for their behavior toward Mr. Griffin.

Mr. Griffin, while serving with Task Force Arriba in San Lorenzo, Honduras, was charged in March 1989, with the loss of his rifle. Mr. Griffin steadfastly maintained that it had been stolen, but his superiors, in a shockingly unprofessional act, turned him over to what seems to have been local Honduran authorities for interrogation.

Approximately 18 hours later, he was released. Returned to Fort Bragg, Mr. Griffin—5 months later—was given an administrative discharge under chapter 14 provisions. At that time, the rifle still was missing, but there was no evidence ever presented against Griffin and so, seemingly innocent, his enlistment was interrupted and he was thrown out of the Army without an honorable discharge.

I understand, that in a subsequent search by the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command of a private house in Fayetteville, NC—near Fort Bragg—the receiver portion of PV2 Griffin's rifle was recovered along with a cache of 16 other semiautomatic rifles from a man who had been a soldier in Honduras with the task force at the same time Griffin was there.

CBS producer Charlie Thompson approached me in March of this year to request an investigation be made by the inspector general of the Department of Defense into the circumstances surrounding Mr. Griffin's treatment in Honduras. At that time, the rifle still had not been found, but Thompson had received not only a letter bringing the unusual behavior of Griffin's superiors to his attention; but, enclosed with the letter was a copy of the official report of the first investigation which backed up charges made in the letter.

Based upon this information, I requested Mrs. Crawford to initiate the investigation.

I appreciate the speed with which the inspector general's office acted on this matter and I am encouraged that Mrs. Crawford is recommending that the Secretary of the Army initiate an independent review of the disciplinary actions taken in the case against the officers involved.

It is accepted by all that PV2 Griffin was treated unfairly. What seems to be left to be answered is the question of the judgment of the general officers—in having issued letters of commendation on the tour of duty in Honduras of the four officers involved in the extreme actions taken against PV2 Griffin—and the actions of the Army investigating officers in not considering charges against the officers under the Military Code of Justice; that is, article 134, kidnapping; article 97, unlawful detention; article 128, assault; and article 134, requesting commission of an offense.

I insert the official report in the RECORD.

RECOMMENDATIONS

A. The Secretary of the Army initiate an independent review of the disciplinary action taken against the four officers involved in the mistreatment as well as the inappropriate discharge given to PV2 Griffin. While both general officers acted within their discretionary authority by issuing nonpunitive, administrative reprimands to the officers involved, we find compelling justification to review the action taken. The following facts are reiterated to support the need for an independent review:

1. was administered a less serious letter of reprimand than recommended in the AR 15-6 investigation.

2. was the subject of a concurrent USACIDC criminal investigation on the mistreatment incident and listed as the subject of a court-martial offense in that investigation.

3. The AR 15-6 investigating officer did not address or comment on all the possible punitive remedies available pertaining to the four officers found responsible and culpable in report. We believe that the AR 15-6 investigating officer should have sought legal advice in addressing whether the detention and mistreatment of PV2 Griffin may have constituted offenses under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, such as kidnapping (Article 134), unlawful detention (Article 97), assault (Article 128) and requesting commission of an offense (Article 134).

4. No written record was located pertaining to counseling and official military file reflects the award of the Army Achievement Medal for meritorious achievement during the March-April 1989 time frame for performance of duty during deployment to Honduras.

5. The outstanding performance evaluations, letters of reprimand, counseling and award of at least one medal, all during the same time period, are not consistent.

B.

C. The Secretary of the Army upgrade PV2 Griffin's discharge to an Honorable Discharge.

THREE CLEAR TRENDS INDICATE GUARD, RESERVES WILL PLAY BIGGER ROLE IN NATIONAL DEFENSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMAS of Georgia). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to continue to share with my colleagues a series of articles which appeared in the Roll Call newspaper in the April 30, 1990, edition in a special policy brief titled "National Guard and Reserves in a Changing World." This brief was developed to describe the roles and missions of the Reserve components and to educate the readers. I wrote the lead article in hopes of generating interest by the readers to learn more about the Guard and Reserve. I commend my colleagues to read these articles to gain a better appreciation of the Guard and Reserve. Today I'm sharing another in the series of articles that appeared in that April 30 Roll Call edition.

THE NEW AND IMPROVED NATIONAL EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE PREVENTION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today Representatives HAROLD FORD, DELLUMS, PELOSI, LANTOS, ROYBAL, and I are introducing a revised version of the National Earthquake Damage Prevention Act, H.R. 3624.

This bill requires the establishment of building codes to reduce the damage and loss of life in major earthquakes—earthquakes which are certain to strike both in the East and the West in the next few decades. This bill uses the Tax Code to make sure that the new standards are used in new structures by denying the use of tax exempt bonds and deductions for interest and depreciation on new and renovated structures built after 1996 which do not meet the new standards.

Since the introduction of H.R. 3624 last fall, we have sought the advice and counsel of a large number of experts in the earthquake field. I particularly want to thank Melissa Moore, Director of Public Affairs for the American Association of Engineering Societies, Carl Bretscher, from the Office of Legislative and Public Affairs for the National Science Foundation, James Beavers Ph.D., P.E., senior staff consultant at the Martin Marietta Energy Systems Inc., Robert Hanson, President of the Earthquake Engineering Research Institute, professor of civil engineering at the University of Michigan, and director of biological and critical systems division for the National Science Foundation, Jane Bullock, project specialist in natural and technical hazards for the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and Gary Johnson, Chief of Earthquakes and Natural Hazards National Earthquake Program for FEMA. From their advice the National Earthquake Damage Prevention Act has been changed in two major ways.

The first change is to use FEMA's model seismic code for the standards which buildings must meet. In the past, the model seismic code has been just that—a model. This bill will make builders use the model seismic code.

The second change is to have the renovation of old structures meet the model seismic code. This addresses the main concern the Earthquake Engineering Research Institute had about the original version of the bill, which was that only a small number of structures would be affected by the bill. By bringing buildings up to code while they are being renovated, more structures will be made safe while still keeping costs down. I would like to have all buildings retrofitted to be earthquake safe, but I know that it would cost too much in most cases. This bill would only strengthen structures which would already be under construction or reconstruction.

With these changes I believe the National Earthquake Damage Prevention Act will significantly mitigate the growing threat of earthquakes in this country—which I outlined in previous CONGRESSIONAL RECORD speeches. The longer we wait to address the risk earthquakes pose; the closer we are to the next big one!

I urge members to listen to experts like Warren Hopkins, president of the Association of Bay Area Governments, who said, "Compared to the earthquakes to come, the October 17 shaker was a love pat." Support the National Earthquake Damage Prevention Act today.

THE EMERGENCY FOOD AND DRUG ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1990

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to introduce, with my distinguished colleague from Virginia, THOMAS J. BLILEY, the ranking Republican member of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations and 33 other members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the Emergency Food and Drug Enforcement Act of 1990.

This bill addresses three urgent needs: the cleanup of the troubled generic drug industry; the protection of Americans from dangerous food imports, particularly low-acid canned foods; and the availability of trained criminal investigators to enforce the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act.

Each of these provisions addresses a problem uncovered by the Oversight Subcommittee during the 101st Congress.

The subcommittee's generic drug investigation is not yet complete, but it is clear that legislation to reform this industry should be enacted this Congress. To date, there have been 13 criminal convictions arising from the investigation and additional charges are expected in the coming months. More than 100 products have been recalled or withdrawn, and 5 of the top 10 generic drug firms—ranked by number of approved application—have been implicated in corruption, fraud or false statements. This bill is needed to restore the confidence of the American people in generic drugs and to assure that the Food and Drug Administration [FDA] has the authority to remove from the marketplace those individuals and companies who bribe regulators, falsify applications, or otherwise subvert the streamlined generic drug approval process.

The generic drug provisions of the bill address the need for a safe and reliable generic drug industry by requiring or permitting the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services [HSS] to debar from future generic drug approvals for periods ranging upward from 3 years, those firms and individuals convicted or seriously implicated in bribery, fraud, false statements or other cries which undermine the FDA approval process.

It also permits the Secretary to suspend sales of existing generic drugs from companies engaging in such crimes until they show that their other applications are not tainted.

Due process for both companies and individuals is explicitly provided. Existing remedies such as the authority of the Secretary to temporarily withhold new approvals from suspect companies and to withdraw permanently generic drug applications tainted by fraud are codified.

Some generic firms will undoubtedly oppose this legislation, particularly those which are or will be targets of the criminal investigations being conducted by the U.S. attorney in Baltimore. But we expect support from a majority of honest generic firms who recognize the importance of cleaning up this industry once and for all.

The American people need reliable generic drugs. Our individual budgets and those of state, local, and Federal government are desperate for the relief such medicines provide from the rapidly rising cost of drugs. Only when the bad actors, individuals, and in a few cases, firms, exit the industry can Americans again feel comfortable with low cost generic alternatives to prescription medications.

This emergency enforcement bill also addresses other topics that have arisen during the course of hearings by the Oversight Subcommittee in the 101st Congress. Section 7 specifically provides the Secretary of HHS with the authority to order the destruction of food and drug imports which cannot be rehabilitated and which pose a health hazard. This contrasts with existing law which permits the reexport of such goods and has resulted in a process of port shopping and other fraudulent schemes that have permitted contaminated foods and drugs to reach unsuspecting consumers here and abroad. Section 7 also provides for the licensing of importers of low acid canned foods so that the FDA can finally get meaningful control over the imports of these potentially dangerous products. Hearings by this subcommittee led to exposure of widespread illness in this country from contaminated canned mushrooms imported from China.

The bill also restores authority to the Inspector General of the Department of HHS to conduct certain investigations for which the FDA is not qualified or for which the Department of Justice [DOJ] lacks the personnel. This section closely follows a memorandum of understanding [MOU] recommended by the General Accounting Office [GAO] in 1987 and agreed to by the Commissioner of FDA and the Inspector General of HHS in January of 1989. The MOU was crippled by Secretary Sullivan's decision to rescind his delegation of authority to the Inspector General, and scores of investigations are now in limbo. See the subcommittee staff report, "Naked Reverse: Secretary Sullivan's rescission of His Delegation of Investigative Authority to the Inspector General," April 1990, Committee Print 101-S.

Finally, the bill clarifies Congress' right to trade secret material in the FDA's possession and creates limited sunshine of the generic drug approval process. The subcommittee's investigation was hindered by the substantial reduction of material. This problem had been resolved in last years' reconciliation bill, but the actual language was inadvertently omitted from the enrolled bill—although it is referenced in the conference report. The sunshine provisions are designed to make public limited data that, if available in 1986-88, would likely have triggered an earlier investigation of approval process irregularities.

A section-by-section description of the bill follows:

EMERGENCY FOOD AND DRUG ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1990 SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1.—The title is "Emergency Food and Drug Enforcement Act of 1990."

Section 2.—New Section 306 (Debarment) gives the Secretary authority to refuse to accept, review or approve generic drug [§ 505(j)] applications for companies under specified circumstances.

Creates mandatory debarment for firms and/or individuals from involvement in the generic drug approval process for felony criminal conviction in connection with development or approval of generic drugs. [306(a)]

Creates permissive debarment of firms and/or individuals by the Secretary for (1) a criminal conviction in connection with an activity relating to the development or approval of generic drugs, (2) a criminal conviction for bribery, fraud, or similar crime, (3) a criminal conviction related to obstruction of justice, (4) being named as unindicted coconspirator for such crimes, or (5) knowing use of a debarred person. [306(b)]

Permits the Secretary to temporarily withhold generic drug approvals if he finds probable cause to believe a firm or individual has engaged in (1) bribery or attempted bribery of an HHS employee in connection with a generic drug, (2) a pattern of false statements or representations relating to any generic drug, or (3) knowing multiple violations of the Act which have seriously endangered the public health or safety. This period of denial is limited to 18 months, extendable for up to 18 additional months if the firm or individual has been indicted. [306(c)]

Provisions for notice and opportunity for hearing, and authority for the Secretary to conduct discovery and hold hearings. [306(c)]

Individuals will be permanently debarred for felony convictions relating to the generic drug review process, and the minimum period of debarment for convicted companies and individuals, including those named as unindicted coconspirators, is 3 years. [306(e)]

Judicial review provision, with substantial evidence standard for Secretary's findings of fact. [306(f)]

Debarment may be terminated at end of the minimum period upon application to Secretary if the Secretary finds no basis for its continuation and there are reasonable assurances that actions will not recur. [306(g)]

The Secretary shall make public a list of debarred individuals and companies. [306(h)]

Employees who assist the government in the debarment process are protected from retaliation. [306(i)]

Definitions of "convicted" and "knowingly". [306(j)]

This section applies to acts occurring after September 1, 1984. [306(k)]

Section 3.—Amends Section 505(j) to add to generic drug applications the requirement that the applicant certify it did not and will not use the services of a debarred person in connection with the application.

Section 4.—New Section 305 (Civil Money Penalties) deletes existing section language requiring notice before the Secretary recommends criminal prosecution for any violation of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, and creates civil money penalties of up to $100,000 for individuals and $5,000,000 for companies committing certain offenses in connection with generic drugs.

Provides a list of offenses in connection with generic drugs that can trigger penalties: (1) false statements; (2) bribery or gratuity; (3) destruction of records; (4) failure to make obligated disclosure of a material fact; (5) obstruction of investigation; (6) use of debarred person; (7) as a debarred person, subjecting another person to sanction; or (8) endangering the public helath or safety through knowing violation of the Act. [305(a)]

Provisions for notice and hearing, and authority for the Secretary to conduct discovery and hold hearings. [305(b)]

Whistleblower bounty of $250,000 or one-half of penalty imposed and collected, whichever is less [305(e)]

Section 5.—New Section 307 (Suspension) creates suspension authority covering distribution of all generic drugs unless the manufacturer can prove that the drugs were unaffected by the illegal acts or that audits and other reforms have eliminated the need for suspension.

Creates authority to suspend distribution of generic drugs when pattern or practice exists of acts listed in Section 306 in connection with the development, approval, manufacturing, or distribution of two or more generic drugs. But no suspension possible for a particular drug if person shows that the offenses or acts did not influence the development, approval, manufacturing, or distribution of that drug. [307(a)]

Provisions for notice and hearing, and authority for the Secretary to conduct discovery and hold hearings. [307(b)]

The Secretary can waive suspension on public health grounds. [307(c)]

The suspension order can be withdrawn if the suspended drugs have been satisfactorily audited to assure they meet FDA standards and the person presents evidence of ownership, management, and operational reforms to satisfactorily remedy the pattern or practice of acts. Information submitted to the Secretary shall be made public. [307(d)]

This section applies to acts occurring after September 1, 1984. [307(e)]

Section 6.—New Section 308 (Withdrawal) creates explicit authority to withdraw approval of generic drug applications in cases of bribery, fraud, or false statements.

Approvals shall be withdrawn if the application was influenced by bribery, gratuity, fraud or false statement, or was the subject of attempted bribery, gratuity, fraud or false statement. [308(a)]

Provisions for notice and hearing, and authority for the Secretary to conduct discovery and hold hearings. [308(b)]

This section applies to improper acts regardless of when they occurred. [308(c)]

Section 7.—Amendments Relating to Imports and Exports

Section 801(a) amended by creating a new category of merchandise which is refused entry because it is a threat to the public health. FDA identifies such articles and Customs is responsible for insuring their destruction within 30 days, except that FDA can permit entry if the goods can be brought into compliance. Reexportation is not an option.

Section 801(b) amended by requiring the owner or cosignee of the imported goods to post a bond equal to three times their value if the merchandise is released to them while FDA approval is pending. However, upon the recommendation of the FDA, Customs can refuse to authorize such delivery and the goods must then remain in the physical custody of Customs.

A new Section 413 creates licensing and record-keeping requirements for manufacturers and importers of low-acid canned foods.

Section 8.—Gives the Inspector General authority to investigate false statements made to the FDA, fraud or abuse involving any program administered by the FDA, drug diversion and counterfeiting, FDA employee misconduct, and certain other matters.

Section 9.—Explicitly gives appropriate committees of Congress access to the trade secret material at the FDA and requires the Secretary to make public limited information concerning applications for generic drug approvals.

Section 10.—This Act does not preclude existing criminal or civil remedies.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to join the chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, Mr. DINGELL, as the lead Republican cosponsor of H.R. 4810, the Emergency Food and Drug Enforcement Act of 1990. This important legislation is an outgrowth of the investigation by the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations, of which Mr. DINGELL is chairman and I am the ranking Republican member, into the generic drug scandal at the Food and Drug Administration [FDA]. A majority of the oversight subcommittee and the full committee are original cosponsors of the bill.

Our subcommittee, on a bipartisan basis, pioneered an investigation over the better part of the past 2 years which contributed to 13 guilty pleas in U.S. District Court in Baltimore by 4 persons then in key positions in FDA's Division of Generic Drugs, 5 generic drug company executives, 3 generic drug companies, and 1 generic drug industry consultant. These persons pleaded guilty to a host of Federal crimes, from the payment or receipt of illegal gratuities, to interstate transportation in aid of racketeering. More criminal charges are expected, according to public statements by the U.S. attorney's office in Baltimore.

Investigations by the subcommittee and FDA have encompassed more than those who took or paid illegal gratuities to speed up or slow down the processing of generic drug approval applications. Other companies have admitted making false statements of material facts in their applications. For example, several companies gained approval for their generic versions of brand name drugs by substituting the brand name drug for their own product in the lab tests on which FDA based approval of their generic drug applications.

The subcommittee's extensive hearing record spans over 1,300 pages of testimony documenting the problems at FDA in regulating generic drugs and at some of the major generic drug companies. It is disturbing to note that 5 of the top 10 generic drug companies ranked in order of number of generic drug approvals have been implicated in these scandals.

The bill we are introducing today is based on the fact that more than most industries, the generic drug industry is a creature of the Congress. The industry took off after Congress passed the Hatch-Waxman generic drug law in 1984, which made it much easier for companies to obtain approval of proposed generic versions of brand name drugs as the patents on brand name drugs expire. Congress did so as a part of a compromise which restored to the brand name companies some of the patent protection lost during the regulatory process. This trade-off gives the consumer the benefit of innovative drug development while at the same time eventually bringing lower priced generic drug competition to the marketplace.

What Congress did not envision when it passed the 1984 Hatch-Waxman law was that persons in the emerging generic drug industry would be so tempted by the enormous economic advantage to be gained by the company who gets the first approval of a generic version of a given brand name drug that they would engage in the illegal and improper conduct uncovered by the subcommittee, the U.S. attorney in Baltimore, and the FDA itself.

This bill is by no means the cure for all that ails HHS, FDA, and segments of the generic drug industry. However, the bill addresses the fact learned in the course of the investigation that FDA lacks sufficient administrative sanctions to deter this scandalous conduct and punish those who commit such acts. The bill provides FDA with the tools of debarment from new generic drug approvals, civil money penalties, authority to suspend distribution of approved generic drugs, and authority to withdraw certain generic drug approvals.

In drafting this legislation we have been mindful of the understable concern that any sanctions be carefully tailored to situations of actual wrongdoing and that due process be repected. For this reason, the bill requires that persons be notified and afforded an opportunity for a hearing in advance of the imposition of any penalties. With the notable exception of mandatory debarment for persons convicted of a Federal felony in connection with an activity relating to the development or approval of a generic drug, the rest of the sanction are largely within the discretion of the Secretary of Health and Human Services. In this manner, the sanctions can be based on the facts of a particular situation, as well they should be.

With respect to sanctions for improper and illegal conduct by firms in the generic drug industry, our bill is consistent with, and indeed largely follows, the recommendations of the administration as contained in the draft bill which Secretary Sullivan sent to the Speaker on April 23, 1990. The principal difference between the Dingell-Bliley bill and the draft administration bill is that the administration would cover all industries regulated by FDA, not just generic drugs.

The wide sweep of the administration bill is premature. The investigation by the Oversight Subcommittee found serious problems in the generic drug industry and the generic drug approval process. We do not have a similar evidentiary record of problems in the other industries regulated by FDA to justify extending these sanctions to other industries. In addition, as noted above, the generic drug industry and the abuses we found in it are a direct result of the abbreviated product approval process which is unique to generic drugs. Finally, the volume of brand name drugs going off patent in the next 5 years is reported to be over $10 billion in sales volume. If the FDA process broke down when processing the applications which it has confronted since 1984, there is no telling how bad things could get in the next 5 years. Our consumers deserve the benefit of drug price competition, but in an environment where the generic drug approval process is no longer tainted and the cloud can be lifted from over the industry. Thus, we should enact this as emergency legislation without delay.

In addition to sanctions, the bill addresses several other matters. Chief among them is making it clear that the Inspector General of the Department of Health and Human Services can investigate certain types of serious complaints involving the FDA and related matters. A recent Justice Department opinion cast doubt on the use of the Inspector General in this fashion. The subcommittee has been very impressed with the work of the Inspector General in the generic drug investigation. The Inspector General's resources should continue to be brought to bear on these types of cases.

Finally, another subcommittee investigation highlighted weaknesses in our existing food import law, particularly in the area of low acid canned food. A hearing documented that over 100 people were taken ill by toxins found in imported canned mushrooms from China. Given limited FDA resources, very little of the food which is imported is checked or otherwise tested. Low acid canned foods are those which lack sufficient acid to kill harmful substances when cooked. The bill would set up a streamlined licensing process for such food importers. The United States has more control over them since they do business in the United States as opposed to relying solely on infrequent FDA inspections of overseas canneries.

THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY, PENNOYER SCHOOL, NORRIDGE, IL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, May 18, 1990, the Pennoyer School, District No. 79, 5200 North Cumberland Road, Norridge, IL, will celebrate the 150th anniversary of its founding.

In 1839 the community saw a need for a school. Pulling together they agreed that every adult would contribute $5 for materials and would pitch in to help build the school on land donated by John Pennoyer. A one-room schoolhouse which was heated by a wood stove was completed and used until 1893 when the one room was enlarged. An updated facility was built on the site in 1922, and with the population boom of the 1940's and 1950's, additional rooms were put on the building. In 1955 even more expansion was needed and construction began on a state-of-the-art facility at the present site.

Today the Pennoyer School consists of two preschool classrooms, two full day kindergarten rooms, elementary first through eighth grade classrooms, plus special education programs for the learning disabled coupled with programs for the average and the gifted students. Microcomputers for the students in kindergarten through eighth grade enrich the school programs as well as do the performing arts classrooms.

As a teacher by profession, I know that it is not just the structure of brick and mortar that makes a school, it is the community, students, teachers, administrators and staff. The Pennoyer School has been blessed through the years with individuals who recognized the changing needs of their community and who were not afraid to act—with students eager to learn when given an environment in which they were free to excel—with teachers who, while teaching basics, were not scared to allow the minds of their students to stretch beyond their so-called highest limits—with administrators who allowed teachers and students to go past the artificial barriers of conventional educational institutions—and with staff who provided invaluable support for the work of teachers and administrators while being sympathetic to student needs.

Mr. Speaker, today many talk about commitment to educational excellence, but 150 years ago members of the Pennoyer School community did more than just talk. They took responsibility and positive action for the education of their young citizens, and that heritage of assuming responsibility for providing quality education continues to this day.

As the Member of Congress representing the 11th Congressional District of Illinois where Pennoyer School is located, I congratulate Dr. Deno F. Fenili, Superintendent of District 79, and the students, teachers, parents, administrators and staff of the Pennoyer School on the 150th anniversary of its founding. I take pride in their achievements and extend my best wishes for continuing success in their endeavors in the years ahead.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate my 30-minute special order and ask for a 5-minute special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

CLOSE AMERICAN BASES IN THE PHILIPPINES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, more Americans are being killed in the Philippines and the Philippine Government does nothing. No one is apprehended nor punished. Nothing in that is new. One could ask are the killings of the Americans aided and abetted by an anti-American mentality of the Philippine Government?

If the American taxpayers knew the true story and the true cost of how much we are being milked by the Government of the Philippines, then our taxpayers would truly be totally outraged. At this time the United States negotiators are in the Philippines renegotiating a new agreement for these bases in the Philippines. In my opinion, these negotiators, who say they represent our country, are not really representing the American people, but are representing the State Department and the Pentagon.

I have a question. We have 40,000 Americans in the Philippines to protect the Philippines. From whom?

The only arms involvement of the American forces in the Philippines in the last 45 years occurred when F-4 fighters put down a coup attempt to protect President Aquino from toppling off her throne. The Philippine people are a very congenial and very affable people, but they do not want nor need our American bases, period.

According to our own Pentagon, when you ask the question, what are the pluses, what are the positives if we left the Philippines militarily, there are three basic answers: First, the American taxpayer would save billions of dollars; second, we Americans would be better liked by the Filipino people; and third, there would be less prostitution in the Philippines. I believe these are three laudable goals.

Let us turn America away from the old ties of the past in the direction of the new world, a world that we are moving in that is as different as the world was in 1492, when Columbus discovered America. We are in a world of economic competition. Let us prepare for that new world. Let us not keep our focus on the old world of 50 years ago. This is a new age and new challenges.

History teaches us that rigid societies will wither and die. Let us think anew and act anew in this modern world. We know that in our own world, that we have to have flexibility if we have power. We Americans must be flexible. We cannot be tied always to the old ways, the ways things were done 50 years ago.

The reward for the new direction, for a new decisiveness in action, will be great. The American taxpayer will save billions. We will spend those billions on education, roads, environment, on the infrastructure, and yes, on our own economy. We will make America more competitive.

The consequences for staying with the bases are enormous, too. The negative image of our country in the Philippines will continue. The increase of anti-American feeling and demonstrations will continue. The deaths of more Americans will continue. Is that what we want? I do not think so.

It is important for us in the Congress and the American people to remember that our two countries, the two world leaders, the United States and the U.S.S.R., have spent themselves into bankruptcy because we have stayed to the tired, wornout policies of the past.

The U.S.S.R. is totally coming apart at the seams. And how about our own country? We have a $3 trillion national debt. Our country is the largest debtor nation in the world.

At this very time we are meeting at the White House in an economic summit, a summit we are having with ourselves. Why? Because we are billions of dollars short and we do not know where to find these funds. We are, yes, the largest debtor nation in the world.

I am curious. Why should the American people defend, for example in the Philippines, a people who do not want us to defend them?

Question: do they need us? They do not think so. And is that not really the issue? Our entire relationship with the Philippines is clouded by the bases. We have to look into the future.

In the 1990's and into the 21st century the great nations of the world will be built on three pillars: high technology, and that includes education and infrastructure and so on; entrepreneurship, all the creative thinking needed in the world; and, three, traditional values. Because no matter how strong or economically powerful a nation is, the nation needs to have moorings, people have to have moorings. The issues of the 21st century and the 1990's are going to be debated on values.

There is nothing here about costly military bases. These bases will only be an albatross around our neck. Let us do what the American people and the Filipino people want for a change. Let us let the Filipino people determine their own future, their own destiny. They do not need our bases, we do not need those bases. The American people do not need those bases.

The people throughout the world are writing a new chapter in history. Americans should play a positive role. I know it is hard to cut the old ties of the past, to steer a new course, but if other people can do it, we Americans can do it, too.

In the present world we have to be in step. We have to have flexibility, because flexibility is power and rigidness is weakness. Let us keep America strong and flexible.

It is time to save billions. The people throughout the world are beginning a new chapter in world history. It is time to do the will of the people. It is time to close the bases in the Philippines.

This will happen one way or another. It is inevitable. Let us take charge of events and do it now. The people of both countries, the Philippines and the United States, will benefit from a new enlightened policy.

COMMEMORATION OF THE MAY 13 ANNIVERSARY OF THE BEGINNING OF THE TIANANMEN SQUARE HUNGER STRIKE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, this weekend concerned students throughout the world join Congress in commemorating the May 13 anniversary of the beginning of the Tiananmen Square hunger strike. Rallies were organized in Harvard Square, Red Square, Wenceslaus Square in Prague, Buenos Aires, Geneva, Nairobi, Oxford University, Brown, Brandeis, and the University of California. In my own district in San Francisco an all-night vigil was held in front of the the Chinese consulate. A rally followed. Throughout the world the rallies followed the theme of China, the world is watching.

These events were an observation of the May 13 Tiananmen Square hunger strike, as I mentioned. The world watched in awe as unarmed students took on one of the most represessive governments in the world.

In Tibet monks and nuns struggled under the repressive yoke of martial law and 50 years of occupation. In Beijing the regime chose to flex its muscle rather than to expand its thinking.

I commend my colleagues in this body for their demonstration of support by voting a resolution declaring May 13 a national day in support of freedom and human rights in China and Tibet. It celebrates the spirit of those young people who, echoing the words of Patrick Henry 200 years ago, said, "Give me liberty or give me death." It seeks to strengthen the spirit of those citizens of China and Tibet who continue to suffer in prisons and reeducation camps, and it sends a message to the Beijing regime that we recognize the expression of courage shown in Tiananmen 1 year ago and deplore continued efforts to extinguish it.

When that legislation came before the floor last week, one of the champions of the bill and one of the people who worked to pass the legislation is with us today in this special order. I am pleased that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], the head of the Congressional Working Group on Tibet, a leader in the area of human rights throughout the world, especially in China and Tibet, is here, and I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] for her continuing efforts in keeping the issue of human rights in China before the Congress and before the public. She certainly has been diligent and successful in this longstanding effort. We commend her for that.

Mr. Speaker, in 1939, a boat named the St. Louis was off the shores of Miami. Its cargo was 930 Jewish immigrants fleeing from Nazi Germany. As the world closely watched, our Nation argued about what the proper course of action should be. From some quarters we were then told our national security—political and economic—would be imperiled if we let the St. Louis unload its human cargo. From other quarters we heard that to have the ship turned away would be the greatest sin against what this Nation stands for. As we all know, short-term interests, racism, lack of vision and integrity drove our Nation's policy that day and the Jew immigrants were sent away.

Today we face the same choice and hear the same arguments driven by the same fears. We are told that the way to support the Hong Kongnese, the Tibetans, Chinese students and Cambodians pleading for our help, is through assisting the leaders in Beijing with economic growth and reform, and that the last thing that we should do is impose strong economic sanctions because our Nation would suffer along with those people. Besides, what they really need in the first place is to learn what democracy is before they can fight for it and the only way that can happen, as the argument goes is through continued contact with the outside world. We are being urged to forget about what our sanctions have accomplished in South Africa, Nicaragua and in the Eastern bloc. For China and Tibet they don't apply. In other words, ignore Hitler, throw him a few bones and he will go away.

Most-favored-nation status, by law, is tied to immigration. Leaders of the democracy movement in the PRC leave through underground railroads and Tibetans trying to cross the border into Nepal are turned back in chains by border guards under pressure from the PRC. Of the 42,000 students from the PRC studying here only 2, not 2,000, just 2 are Tibetans. Is this freedom of immigration?

But what about the recent release of prisoners and the lifting of martial law in Lhasa? I urge my colleagues to think back to January when the bill of the gentlelady from California [Ms. PELOSI] was before the Senate. Martial law was supposedly lifted in Beijing and it was claimed that prisoners were released. However, news reports tell us that the repression did not abate and that the names of those released were never given to the human rights monitoring groups. If any of my colleagues have any doubt about the repression in the PRC and Tibet please pick up June's edition of the Reader's Digest and read "Democracy's Heroes Vanish in China's Gulag," which states:

> Bullets and blood may have silenced the heroes of Tiananmen Square for now. But they will be back, again and again, as long as freedom is suppressed. As the world's beacon of democracy, the United States must not ignore their cause—or their sacrifice.

The vast majority of the gulag, by the way, is located in an area of Tibet where the Dalai Lama was born and is now claimed by the PRC to never having been part of Tibet. The Dalai Lama of China—an interesting concept.

I urge my colleagues to consider the conditions in Beijing and Lhasa in order to understand what fate awaits Hong Kong. The way to help ensure, democracy for China and Hong Kong and freedom for Tibet is not through appeasement.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his remarks and for his leadership on these issues, and for calling to the attention of our colleagues the statement in the Reader's Digest, which is current, and the ad which is in the New York Times today, and perhaps other newspapers which points out the situation he describes. The gentleman from New York has been a champion of human rights in the Congress and in the country, and he has shared that enthusiasm with many other Members of this body, and I am gateful to him for his assistance in protecting the Chinese students, of course. But as he points out, the human rights violations in China continue and increase, and we have a great deal of work before us.

This deplorable human rights situation in China has become an important factor in a variety of issues faced by the Congress. The gentleman referred to one, the most-favored-nation status for China, and there are others.

In the spirit of: China, the world is watching, there was a congressional working group on China formed precisely to show the Chinese Government that we are watching. I am very pleased with the response from our colleagues on both sides of the aisle to the working group, and would like to just discuss briefly some of the issues before the group, some of which were already mentioned by our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

One which was mentioned was protection of Chinese students in the United States. At the constant urging of the Congress, and frankly particularly the House of Representatives, the President finally issued an Executive order on April 11 to protect students in the United States, and we are grateful to the President for issuing that order and extending the protection to the students.

But even so, documents smuggled out of the Chinese Embassy by Chinese dissident, Xu Lin, describe a continuing Chinese Government effort to antagonize and harass outspoken Chinese students in this country.

Many of my colleagues have seen this report in the newspaper of Xu Lin, a 23-year-old third secretary in the Education Secretariat of the Chinese Embassy here in Washington, DC, who has been granted political asylum in the United States. He said in an interview that Embassy officials, Chinese Embassy officials, were told by supervisors in the Embassy to go to universities and colleges in this country and carry out a campaign of intimidation against critics, while courting students who were more ambivalent. He said he felt the campaign against the students would not work because the regime had lost all credibility with the students in the aftermath of last June's bloody crackdown on prodemocracy demonstrators.

These important documents that Xu Lin told us about outlined the multiprogrammed effort to isolate and stigmatize about 100 ringleaders who have been most involved in what they call anti-China activities, to win over many students who were judged to be less militant, and to establish an underground network in every school to recruit informants. So we see there still continues to be a need to protect the Chinese students in America as well as those in China, and for this reason we are very grateful for the protections which the President has now extended to them.

Another item on the agenda of the Congressional Working Group on China is the Voice of America. Many members of the group, especially the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER], believe that the Voice of America is a very important element in the continuing attempt to communicate a message of democracy and support to those who love freedom and fight for democracy in China. At our first meeting Mr. SCHEUER suggested that we meet with Voice of America, which we did at our second meeting, and Mr. Richard Carlson of Voice of America was very generous with his time and his staff to brief the members of the Working Group on the extent to which Voice of America is communicated into China.

We learned that our capacity has been increased since the Tiananmen Square massacre. The Voice of America now has 12 hours a day broadcast to China in Mandarin, and 1 hour in Cantonese, 7 hours in English. We have a 1-million-watt transmitter that is used for part of the day, and that technologically we need to find ways to do more, and certainly we need to financially assist the Voice of America in its work. This is a very important element in demonstrating our support and communicating our message of democracy and freedom and identifying with those who fight for freedom in China.

We will be visiting the Voice of America here in Washington, DC and continuing the strong support from the Congress for VOA, which many, as I mentioned, in this body, but also outside this body believe to be a means to final freedom in that country.

Another issue before the China Working Group is the international banking world and bank loans to China, and other multilateral development bank loans to China. At the request of the Working Group, last week, and really under its usual order of business, but it began sooner I believe because of the urging of the Working Group, the Subcommittee on International Development, Finance, Trade and Monetary Policy of our full Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs held hearings on World Bank loans to China. This committee is chaired by the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY], and we were pleased to have put on the record very important information about the loans. Because of the actions of the House of Representatives in legislating economic sanctions in our relationship with China, World Bank loans to China are not allowed unless they meet the criteria of basic human needs.

It is the concern of some of us on that committee, I don't say many because there are not many of us on the committee, but for those on the committee, that basic human needs not be interpreted broadly but be interpreted in the spirit in which it was intended by this body, that we as humanitarians do not want to eliminate the possibility of assisting the Chinese people in their basic human needs but we do not expect to have basic human needs to include transportation issues, infrastructure, et cetera.

So we must be vigilant, very vigilant, and our subcommittee certainly will be doing that, but Congress as a whole must be very vigilant about how basic human needs is interpreted.

This is very important because the world is watching. We are watching China, and the world is watching us to see what we do in the United States vis-a-vis China. If we in this country were to relax that sanction of approving bank loans to China, it would send a clear message to our allies throughout the world, our economic and political allies throughout the world, that it is okay to have loans to China.

And I believe then that would unleash many multilateral loans from countries in the European Community to China and it would be as if Tiananmen Square had never happened or in fact did not make any difference to us, and our economic sanctions would be a farce or a hoax.

So these loans are very, very important, not only in themselves but they are very important in the kind of economic assistance that China would receive from other countries throughout the world.

I believe this view is shared by members of our subcommittee and also by members of the working group, that in making these decisions we must be true to our commitment to democracy and human rights. And human rights as well as other issues relating to centralized economy give is a sufficient reason to deny loans to China by the World Bank and other multilateral relationships we have with them, or have had.

There have been three loans made to China since January under the rubric of basic human needs. One of these loans, for vocational education and training, may not legitimately fall into the basic human needs category.

The president of the World Bank said earlier this year that he expected to extend $1 billion in loans by way of the World Bank to China by July. This figure is a very dismaying figure, and there have been those in the administration who have testified before our committee that they indeed are dismayed as well and have no intention of going that far.

However, at our recent hearing last week, it was reported that $550 million worth of loans could fall under the rubric of basic human needs.

If I am prolonging the discussion on it, it is because it is very important not only for itself but also for the message it sends to our other allies.

Perhaps the issue of most controversy and the issue of most attention for those who do business with China is the issue of most-favored-nation status for China. And this is an issue of grave concern to our working group.

There are those who believe that we should never have instituted most-favored-nation status when it came due June 3 of last year. It has to be one of life's great ironies that at the very same time that the army turned its guns and tanks on the students in Tiananmen Square June 4 in Asia, June 3 in the United States was the day that MFN was put on the table for China.

We were distracted, of course, by the slaughter there. Unfortunately, we did not respond to the MFN discussion, and China now enjoys most-favored-nation status.

What does that mean? Most-favored-nation status is that status which entitles China to the lowest available tariffs on exports to the United States. Its loss would lead to much greater duties.

What it means to China is about $6 billion annually and this MFN is being considered in the light of continuing human rights abuses in China.

As our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], mentioned in his remarks, MFN, most-favored-nation status, has been tied in the past to immigration policy, and we believe we can make a very strong case for immigration policy vis-a-vis China as well as human rights violations and repression in China.

However, I think it is important for this body to consider very, very carefully how we proceed on MFN. To this end, I am very grateful that the Committee on Foreign Affairs will this week and next be holding extensive hearings in the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, and the Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs regarding most-favored-nation status.

Who is it that would be hurt the most? Is it in furtherance of democracy in China to revoke most-favored-nation status? What conditions could we put on MFN if we were to extend it another year?

Really much of this, we will take our lead from the President on. If he sends over the request, then that will probably trigger hearings also in the Committee on Ways and Means, the Gibbons Subcommittee on Trade. It is an issue that needs the most careful attention in the House of Representatives so we are not motivated by punishment but we are motivated by promoting democracy in China and that we take this next step very, very carefully.

There are members of the Congressional Working Group on China who are circulating dear-colleagues to completely revoke most-favored-nation status.

There is strong sentiment in the Congress for this.

By June 3 the President will have to make a decision about whether to send it over again. I think everyone can be assured that whatever decision is made in the end it will be one that is very thoughtful and that will be done placing on the record a complete record of the account of the repression that exists in China today.

So the question would be: Do we renew it? If we do, what conditions do we put on it, recognizing the Tiananmen Square massacre?

If we do not renew it, and we revoke it, what conditions would be met to restore MFN to China?

Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt that Congress is watching for real improvement in China and not just for public relations flourishes.

If in fact we do not revoke MFN but in fact extend it, there are other ways that Members of Congress are presented. For example, some participation of Taiwan in the GATT rather than revoking MFN or maybe in addition to that.

Let the world know that we are focusing on these issues, that we are studying them very carefully and that we have a forum for it in this body and for those who are particularly interested in the Congressional Working Group on China.

In closing, I would just like to acknowledge that last week we were told that 200 prisoners were released. This is an important number.

However, we must not forget the tens of thousands of others who are still incarcerated in China.

There is no record of anyone being released, any of the students who participated in the Tiananmen Square massacre and that none of the workers who suffered very severely in the massacre and the aftermath were released.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I just want to extend to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] the thanks of all of us, especially the California delegation that feels a special kinship to China, because we feel we are practically on the border, on the rim of the Pacific Ocean.

Her work has been enormously beneficial to the people of China and our understanding of the difficulties the Chinese people are going through.

I think that history will show in the long run that Ms. PELOSI and the people who have supported her are the best friends that the Chinese people have ever had.

The record is much clearer as to what the United States should be doing in this difficult situation because of the work of Ms. PELOSI.

Mr. Speaker, we are all very grateful.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the gentleman for his kind remarks and for the leadership that he gives to our delegation and for his support within that delegation so that when we did come to the floor, we had the strong support of all of California on these issues of concern not only to the Chinese students but on human rights throughout the world and really to our own selves, being true to our own traditions in keeping with the chairman's commitment to human rights and civil rights for all people.

I think no one in this body encompasses more that ethic of our democracy and our Constitution than the chairman of the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, the dean of the California delegation, the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

So I am particularly appreciative of his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, to continue, the Government of China insists there are only 431 prisoners remaining in Chinese prisons. This cannot possibly be true. Amnesty International and Asia Watch disagree. We would like to see international human rights organizations allowed into China to resolve this incredible discrepancy. China should publish the names of those released and those still held. If the Government of China wants World Bank loans, wants preferential trade treatment, wants economic vigor that stems from good relations with the West, it must wake up to the reality that is sweeping the world from South America to Eastern Europe.

I was so pleased to hear so many staunch supporters of human rights in the debate on Cuba earlier today. I am certain all of those people will stand up for human rights and democratic principles in China as well. On the principle that tyranny can no longer endure and that the flame of freedom once ignited is not easily put out.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. PELOSI. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS], to whom I think there is no more appropriate person to yield in my closing remarks on human rights in China than the dean of our California delegation who has served so many years as chairman of the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, a person for his life in Congress and his life outside of Congress has been a champion for human rights, individual freedoms and liberties, and a strong, strong commitment to our Constitution and applying those principles to every person who lives, respecting the dignity and worth of every person, whether American, European, Eastern European, Western European, and in the Southern Hemisphere or Asia as well.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] for yielding.

I am going to shift gears and talk for a while about an issue that is deserving of considerable attention in the Congress, and generally in the Nation, especially since we are about to consider a major drug bill which apparently could have a new death penalty provision in the bill. Although the subcommittee that I chair does not have the dominant jurisdiction over the death penalty, there has been a portion of this subject that has been assigned to the subcommittee, and it has to do with procedures relating to the death penalty and whether or not in this country it is being applied fairly and equitably, and whether or not it is applied in a prejudicial manner because of the race or sex of the particular person who has been charged.

Mr. Speaker, in considering the death penalty, one has to realize that it is a very expensive procedure. Experts will testify that it diverts sources that are terribly expensive. The State of Florida, for example, has estimated that it costs $3.2 million to execute a single convict, which is more than six times as much as it would cost to keep him or her in prison until he died of natural causes. The State of Minnesota, which last year decided by overwhelming bipartisan votes not to reinstate the death penalty, concluded that it would cost $25 million a year to reinstitute the death penalty in that State, and would assume that it would only apply to four to six cases per year. For the same amount of money, a witness from the city of Minneapolis, MN, testified that the city of Minneapolis could have doubled the number of police officers for that kind of money. What would the citizens of Minneapolis prefer? Would they be safer with four to six death sentences per year, or twice the number of police officers on the street?

I think that my colleagues ought to contemplate that choice. In other words, what I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that to institute the death penalty would cost as much as doubling the cost of all of the police officers in that city.

In thinking about the death penalty, one has to consider how it is actually imposed in the United States.

The evidence is that the defendant's race and lack of resources to hire a competent lawyer, and his level of intelligence are much more important than the prior record and the nature of the crime. In the last 2 weeks the subcommittee I chair has had some rather shocking testimony about how the death penalty is actually administered in this country, and I would like to share some of the information with my colleagues and those watching this debate. One of the witnesses was a Mr. Stephen D. Bright, who is an attorney practicing law in Atlanta. His experience in this area dates back to just over 10 years ago. He was directing a law school clinical program in Atlanta for a consortium of the law schools at American, Catholic, Georgetown, George Washington, and Howard Universities. He agreed with several colleagues to write a petition for a certirorari for an 18-year-old black youth under death sentence in Georgia. Many Americans are under the impression that the process of imposing death was an elaborate one. From reading the Supreme Court's decision upholding the capital punishment statutes passed in response to Furman versus Georgia, Mr. Bright was also under the impression that a number of procedural protections assured that the death penalty was imposed only for the most heinous and aggravated crimes committed by the most depraved killers. Mr. Bright quickly learned otherwise upon examination of the record of his first case.

The entire record of the proceedings—this is a death penalty decision with pretrial motions—the entire selection, guilt phase and the sentencing phase, was less than 600 typed double-spaced pages. He thought surely that he had not read the entire record, but he checked and found it was the entire record. Upon review of the record, he found a report of an evaluation by the State psychiatrist. There was no evaluation of a defense psychiatrist. The defense lawyer never retained the services of a mental health expert. A preliminary hearing was conducted in which this young man was not represented by an attorney at all. The court-appointed attorney did not show up for the trial. Throughout the trial the accused sat at the counsel table with one raised in the air, and did not communicate with counsel. The lawyer put on no evidence at either stage of the trial. The jury was to decide whether he would live or die, but it never heard any explanation for the defendant's inappropriate behavior. The jury never learned that he suffered from schizophrenia. In fact, they never heard anything from a single witness—parents, teachers, or mental health people—about the young man whose life was in their hands.

The brief filed on appeal in the case was 11 pages long. The section entitled "Argument and Citation of Authority" was six pages long. It was the worst example of an appellate brief that this lawyer had ever seen until that time. Unfortunately, since that time he has seen briefs in more than a few capital cases that are worse than that.

Mr. Bright's observation upon reading the record in this case was that the students in a law school program trying shoplifing cases would do better than in this capital trial and the lawyers who were involved.

Later when he did his own investigation of the case, he found that there was a substantial likelihood that the client did not commit the crime at all. We will never know, because of the lack of any defense investigation near the time of the offense, at the time he was shot. By the quality of the legal representation that he saw and the perfunctory nature of the trial that occurred in this case, since then he has learned that this case is not exceptional. In fact, it was better tried than many capital cases he has seen since that time.

Mr. Bright has become increasingly involved in capital litigation during the past 10 years, in large part because of his dismay at the quality of justice that he observed in that first case. In 1982, he moved to Atlanta to become the director of the Southern Prisoners' Defense Committee, a public interest group founded by foundations, churches, and individuals. And I might add, Mr. Speaker, that I believe there are six lawyers working for this little committee and the average wage is $20,000 per year. These are lawyers that graduated from good law schools throughout the country and who are competent in the practice of law.

The project was created to assist prisoners in challenges to unconstitutional conditions of confinement in 11 southern States. But it has also responded to the need for legal assistance to those facing the death penalty, simply because often there is no other legal assistance available. This program includes, as I said, seven attorneys. They are directly involved in 61 capital cases and in consultation with attorneys in many others. Since 1982 they have been involved in capital cases at the trial and at appellate and postconviction levels. He also served on the American Bar Association task force on review of State death penalty cases which made recommendations that are approved, with some provisions by the ABA House of Delegates. They were approved, I believe, last February.

Unlike 10 years ago, nothing that he has seen in a capital case today shocks him. He has seen a case where the trial started—and I ask that Members listen to this, Mr. Speaker—with a jury selection, and it was tried and ended 17 hours later at 2 a.m. with a death sentence. In between, the jury was deadlocked as to guilt, but the defense lawyer agreed to replace one holdout juror with an alternate. Three hours later a guilty verdict was returned.

He has seen a death sentence case that was tried by a third-year law student. Yes, a third-year law student defended a defendant in a capital case.

He has seen capital cases assigned to defense lawyers on a low bid system in the State court. The only qualification to submit a bid was membership in the Georgia bar. The lowest bidder got the case, not the best lawyer, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, let me make this observation. On that point, whatever position one holds on the death penalty, whether it is a deterrent, whether it is an appropriate punishment, or whether it is cruel and unusual, the gentleman very eloquently makes the point that those who are subjected to it, if they are entitled to the same punishment, certainly should be entitled to comparable representation. Until we move toward that goal in our country, I think our debate will forever be clouded by that issue.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California for that observation.

Mr. Speaker, certainly in a death penalty case there is no second chance, and certainly whoever is charged with a capital offense, where the punishment is irreversible, that person is entitled to all of the protections of the law. A recent study that was made by a group of scientists and researchers from Stanford University disclosed that, yes, there are some capital cases in the United States today where later the investigators found that the person was not guilty.

Ms. PELOSI. That is a very unforgiving punishment, and it does leave too much margin for error, so I would hope that comparable punishment would imply comparable representation, as the gentleman indicated there.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California, and would the gentlewoman yield further to me?

Ms. PELOSI. I yield further to the gentleman from California.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding further.

Mr. Bright has seen four different capital cases in Georgia where at one time in the proceeding the defense lawyer referred to his client as a "nigger." The death sentence was imposed in all four of these cases.

He has seen two lawyers jointly handle three capital cases involving three defendants all in 1 week, even though the defendants had conflicting interests. The first case went to trial on Monday and ended with a death sentence on Tuesday night. The second started Wednesday morning and ended with a life sentence on Thursday. The third defendant pleaded guilty. No defense was offered by any of the defendants.

He has seen a defense lawyer who has handled a number of capital cases in Georgia say that the only criminal law decisions from any courts which he was familiar with were "Miranda and Dred Scott."

He has several observations based upon experiences that he hopes will be useful to my colleagues in considering the various death penalty bills that are before us.

First, the system of imposing the death sentence in this country, approved by the Supreme Court in its 1976 decisions, is not working. The failing of the system is not the reason advanced in this year's political campaign—that we are not killing enough Americans fast enough. It is that the system has failed completely to select for the ultimate punishment the worst offenders who have committed the most heinous crimes.

A member of the Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles has said that if you take 100 cases punished by death and 100 punished by life and shuffle them, it is impossible to put them back in the right categories based on information about the crime and the offender. Justice James Robertson of the Mississippi Supreme Court made the same observation about the imposition of the death sentence in his State in testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee recently.

The various sentencing schemes approved in 1976 are not sorting out the few who deserve death from the many for whom it is not appropriate.

Some mass murderers and serial killers are being sent to death row, but the overwhelming majority of the people he sees are people who are distinguished, not by their records or the circumstances of their crimes, but by their abject poverty, debilitating mental impairment, and minimal intelligence.

One example of the failure of the system is a number of mentally retarded people who we have sentenced to death. Georgia has executed two mentally retarded people. Alabama executed a mentally retarded person last year. He has seen a number of totally retarded clients under charge. He is not speaking here of people of IQ's in the seventies or eighties who have very limited intelligence, but of people suffering a profound mental disability, whose IQ's are below 70 and cannot perform such functions as making change.

For example, one of his clients who was sentenced to death had an IQ of 49. He could not tell whether he was American or Chinese.

These mentally retarded offenders by definition are not among the worst

2 percent of all persons who commit murder in this country. Because of their mental limitations they do not have the same degree of moral culpability of others of our society.

This is one example of the failure of the system to sort out the worst offenders. Many other people, who have been executed or are sentenced to death, have committed crimes no more heinous and have records no worse than hundreds of convicted murderers who were not sentenced to death.

There are several answers to this. One is racial discrimination, which is obvious to anyone who has seen an all-white jury in the rural South decide the fate of a black man accused of a crime against a white. He understands that other witnesses are going to address that problem, and the subcommittee will hear other witnesses on this important problem.

The other is politics. Some of the district attorneys in the South seek the death penalty in almost every case involving murder of a white person. Others almost never seek the death penalty. In each of the States where this commission practices there are few district attorneys known for their frequent use of capital punishment.

Another reason that the system is not working is simply that we are asking the courts to do something that they are incapable of doing.

To prophesy which offenders are so far beyond redemption that they should be eliminated from the human community, this inquery, with all its moral, philosophical, political, and other respects, does not lend itself to legal formulation and procedures. It is much different than that deciding who is at fault in a traffic accident or whether the accused is the person who held up the bank.

We are still wrestling with questions such as these: Does the fact that an accused has brain damage at birth make death an appropriate punishment because it is not fair to hold him to the standard as others? Or who should be executed because the brain damage impairs his ability to control his impulses and make him so very dangerous? Similar inquiries are made with regard to how to deal with a person whose violence can be traced to physical and sexual abuse they received in early childhood. Soon we are going to be asking how to respond to those brain damaged by their mother's use of crack cocaine. These questions have not been answered and probably never will be answered.

Different juries have different answers to different cases, thus contributing much to the inconsistency of sentencing. If Congress enacts legislation allowing Federal juries to impose the death penalty, Federal juries will be equally inconsistent. Usually, however, juries do not even know enough about the accused to make an educated guess on these questions.

Mr. Speaker, we are learning more and more about injuries to the brain, and chemistry, fetal alcohol syndrome, and other factors regarding brain function and violence every day and virtually none of the knowledge is being received in cases where the death penalty is being considered.

The reason for this is the quality of legal representation being provided the poor as in other cases, and this is another cause of failure of the system.

Last fall this committee in Atlanta assumed responsibility for representation of a totally mentally retarded youth sentenced to death in Alabama. He eventually learned that his I.Q. was 58. He was put in special education classes in the second grade because he could not keep up. His mother died when he was 5, and he was brought up with nine siblings in a two-room shack by his mentally retarded father. There was no running water, no electricity. Inside the shack the children could see the chickens through the slats in the floor and the sky above. They could feel the rain when it fell. They put plastic on the bed when it rained.

Mr. Speaker, none of this information was presented in the court that sentenced the young man to die. Each of his lawyers, he had two of them, spent less than 30 hours on the case including time spent in trial. They never bothered to get his school records or speak to the special education teachers. They presented nothing at his trial about sentencing.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield,

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to know what crime this young man committed.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I did not get the gentleman's question.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. What crime did the young man commit? What did he do?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. It was a murder.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. What kind of a murder? Was it a multiple murder, or individual murder, or what?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I do not have that detail. All I know is that it was murder of a white person.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I see. The gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] has the details of his background and his childhood, but he does not have the details of the crime he committed.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I have it back at the office, and I will be glad to furnish it to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I appreciate that very much.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. This young man could have accepted a plea offer and avoided the death penalty. I am sure that the reason he did not was because his lawyer did not understand the mental limitations and did not help him understand the benefits of a plea, particularly since he was not going to receive any advocacy at the trial.

The lawyers also let him decide by himself in open court, with no advanced preparation, whether to waive a jury sentencing and be sentenced by the judge. He had no understanding of what his choice was. Finally he said, and, turning to the judge, he said, "I pick you," and the judge sentenced him to death.

Mr. Speaker, this young man was not sentenced to death because he had committed the worst crime. The State acknowledged that by offering him a death sentence. He was really sentenced to death because he had the worst lawyers.

Over 50 years ago in the case of the Scottsboro Boys in Alabama, the Supreme Court said that as a matter of constitutional law that we would no longer sentence poor people to death without first providing them competent legal representation, yet the case that I have just described, Mr. Speaker, illustrates that promise has not been fulfilled.

Last year, in the same State where the trial of the Scottsboro Boys occurred, a capital trial had to be delayed for a day in midtrial because the defense lawyer was drunk. He was held in contempt and sent to jail. The next morning he and his client were both produced from jail, the trial resumed, and the death penalty imposed a few days later.

Inadequate legal representation does not occur in just a few capital cases. It is pervasive in the death belt States of the South. There are several reasons, but the primary one is money.

Alabama limits compensation for out-of-court representation to $20 per hour, with a limit of $1,000. One rare Alabama case where two lawyers devoted 264 and 188 hours respectively to out-of-court representation, they were still paid $1,000 each.

Mississippi and Arkansas limit the total compensation of defense counsel in capital cases to $1,000. South Carolina pays $10 per hour up to a limit of $1,500.

One judicial circuit in Georgia awarded capital cases to the lowest bidder.

Total fee awards of from $2,500 to $5,000 are not unusual.

In many Southern States a lawyer devotes 800 to 1,000 hours to do an adequate job in a capital case and he or she will make less than the minimum wage. When you factor in overhead, that attorney is losing $20 to $50 per hour to handle a capital case.

To get a sense of the quality of legal representation you get for less than a minimum wage or even $5 to $10 per hour, I encourage you to try to hire an attorney for this amount. You will not draw applicants from the top ranks of the legal profession. Many of the lawyers handling death penalty cases would not be hired by any middle or upper class family to handle a mild traffic offense. All too often the lawyers who are appointed at these rates are the young and inexperienced and the old, broken down and incompetent.

There have been capital cases in Mississippi and Georgia where the defense attorney, his first criminal jury trial was a capital trial.

What one most often hears about from the lawyers who are appointed to defend the poor in capital trials is that they will never, never try to handle another capital case. It is disastrous financially. It is emotionally draining. It ruins a lawyer's other business in the community. Lawyers want to defend death cases about as much as a candidate for public office wants to be viewed as being against the death penalty.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I believe that my time is coming to a close and I wanted to take a moment to recognize the gentleman for his fine statement and thank him for making it here today.

I would like, with the gentleman's permission, to yield to the gentleman from Indiana whom I promised would be allowed some time of my time today, so if the gentleman will permit, or would the gentleman like to close before I yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. No. I thank the gentlewoman for her kindness in yielding to me on this important matter.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his very valuable statement on an issue of grave concern to us as individual Members and, of course, to our society.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding to me. I will just take a moment.

I would like to compliment the gentlewoman on taking this special order regarding the problems that are being faced by the people in China and the repression they have been enduring and that has been increasing ever since Tiananmen Square. We here in the United States seem to be forgetting very rapidly what happened just a few short months ago in Tiananmen Square when tanks rolled into that square and pressed young people under those treads of those tanks, just because they wanted freedom and democracy and the values and the benefits which we have in this country.

I think that it ill-behooves us to remember what happened in Tiananmen Square and to tell the people of America and our colleagues that the repression in China is increasing, instead of decreasing. It is getting worse instead of better. We need to have our President and this Congress constantly telling the American public and the people of the world that this repression and these human rights violations will not be tolerated by this country and that we are going to try to keep this in the forefront of our minds so that we can do whatever is necessary to stop it and to bring that country to democracy.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his comments. As we approach the 1-year anniversary of Tiananmen Square, his comments are most appropriate. I know that he as well as other Members of this body will stand by this young man. One man standing against madness kindles anew the spark of freedom and elevates the spirit of man. How can we not stand with the young man before the tank.

I am pleased that the gentleman from Indiana is standing with him, and I thank him for his contribution to this special order.

THE AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I take the well this afternoon to discuss an issue that we will debate in this House probably sometime this week, called the Americans With Disabilities Act, a piece of legislation that really got its impetus last summer and jumped on the railroad track and has been running down that railroad track ever since, passed by the Senate last fall, and was referred to four different committees in this House this year and has now been reported out of those four committees. It sits in the Rules Committee right now where the Rules Committee is trying to write a rule to bring this bill to the floor.

In opening my remarks, Mr. Speaker, what I would like to do is just try to briefly summarize what the bill attempts to do and then deal with some controversial issues that are in the bill that we are trying to correct.

It is my opinion in dealing with this bill for now some 5 months that this is a piece of legislation that has the best intentions, and that being to stop the discrimination against those who are most unfortunate in our society, those who are disabled, a laudable goal, a goal that I think is very important and a goal that I think deserves the merit of consideration in this House; but I am very fearful of the way that this bill has found itself coming to the floor and very fearful of the way that it has been lobbied and passed. The bill, according to the proponents of the Americans With Disabilities Act, the ADA bill, is purported by the opponents as being nothing more than codifying in law for the private sector that which we have already lived under by the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 or 1974. I disagree with that.

Trying to bring the Rehabilitation Act which prohibits discrimination against employment of those that are disabled and requires that public accommodations be made readily accessible to the disabled deals with Government buildings and those businesses doing business with the Government, deep pocket government.

It has been proven time and time again the incredible costs the Rehabilitation Act has had on our Government. Now we are taking that deep pocket theory and applying it to the private sector, where it tries to eliminate discrimination of employment, in employment of the disabled in the private sector.

The private sector does not have deep pockets. The private sector has to make a profit to provide the jobs that we enjoy today and the standard of living that we enjoy today. The bill, if it is properly written, should tell the private sector, No. 1, who is disabled and how do you comply with the bill in making a public accommodation to those who are disabled.

The ADA bill does not do this. It relies heavily on case law. The proponents of the bill in hearings even admit that it is ambiguous and vague in its language, and that the courts will decide who are disabled and how do you comply. This is a very ominous position that our business people are being put in, especially the small business person who does not have the capability of hiring expensive lawyers to defend against frivolous suits or suits that are being brought to harass a particular place of business.

So we have a bill that I personally feel has the right goals, but frankly, being a small businessman in Houston, TX, Mr. Speaker, I feel it is just good business to hire the disabled, because they make such excellent employees. But we have a bill now that has been referred to as the catastrophic illness bill for business, a bill that is vaguely written and is very ambiguous in many terms. We will discuss some of those terms as we go through this special order.

The way we got here is that the Bush administration supported the idea of the bill and made a deal with Members of the other body in passing this piece of legislation in the Senate and brought it to the House and felt like since they made this deal, they have to honor the deal in the House, and therefore have resisted supporting clarifying amendments, or in some cases opposing some amendments.

Members have been very reluctant to support or stand up and be counted as those Members that feel like the bill needs to be corrected. It passed the Senate overwhelmingly and now enjoys the support of about 197 House cosponsors. The fact that it is moving so quickly is not surprising to many conservatives, since the bill enjoys the support of a well-organized, well-founded coalition of interest groups.

What does surprise some of us on and off the Hill, however, is the lack of discussion and attention that the bill has received from Members. Moreover, there is the lack of public recognition among even business people that the bill contains serious problems.

The current conventional wisdom explaining reluctance of Members to voice objection to the bill is that by doing so Members will be viciously attacked as being against the disabled. Indeed, the Republican leadership has gone to great lengths not to openly criticize the bill, fearing that Republicans would be branded as antidisabled.

This hesitancy among Members is viewed by lobbyists as a roadblock in their efforts to get Members and staff to develop a strategy to amend and clarify the ADA.

Said one House lobbyist for the business community, "Too many Members are worried about the 30-second commercial and not the impact that this law will have on their business constituents. This could likely be the equivalent of the catastrophic care bill for business."

The intent of the legislation is to end discrimination against the handicapped. However, the legislation that is introduced in my opinion is unacceptable. Its problems are numerous. There are vague and ambiguous terms regarding who will be qualified as disabled, the definition of reasonable accommodation and undue hardship, as well as the uncharacteristically stern remedies that are sought for intentional or unintentional violations.

These concerns are not minor. If they are not adequately addressed, employers and owners of public accommodations, and for that matter the general public, may begin to resent the requirements that will be forced on them due to ridiculous court rulings or court rulings required because Congress refused to clarify the terms mentioned above.

The four committees that considered the bill have not addressed all these issues. They have chosen to ignore these issues, and have chosen to leave it in the hands of the courts. It is really unfortunate that several conservative Members feel obligated to support, much less cosponsor, legislation labeled civil rights for disabled Americans, regardless of how unpalatable they may be.

As the legislation will affect nearly every aspect of American society, they have a responsibility to at least know what is in such legislation before they jump on that civil rights bandwagon. Congress should pass legislation providing for fair treatment and equal opportunity for the disabled. However, Members must ensure that passage of this legislation does not result in creating bitterness and resentment against those that are disabled.

Let us go to some of the controversial issues that have seen little or no progress in the House. We might address first the problem of who are the disabled.

In that context, according to the bill that is sitting in the Committee on Rules, in my opinion that bill just about makes everyone disabled, whether you are truly disabled and show symptoms of disability. Certainly they are classified as disabled.

But we also have people that have relationships with disabled, and certainly a case can be made that a mother or father of a disabled child could be discriminated against. For example, they could be discriminated against because that child may drain a certain company's health plan in one way or another. Well, that may be true, and certainly many of us support the fact that those that are disabled or those that have a direct blood relationship could be classified as disabled.

But this bill goes farther than that. It includes a student-teacher relationship, where if you are a teacher of a disabled student you are classified as disabled.

We also have for the first time that I know of behavioral disorders as being disabled. The fact that someone that has a propensity to walk in a factory, as was done in Kentucky, and open fire on their employers, would be considered to have a mental or behavioral disorder, and you cannot discriminate against such a person.

Those that are former drug addicts and alcoholics, even though they may be reformed, cannot be discriminated against. They are considered as disabled. So the captain of the Valdez, who was charged with having a drinking problem, would have to be put right back on the Valdez, without even a timespan in between to determine whether he had licked his problem or not. He would be disabled and would be required to be hired.

We as Members feel that the requirement that one relies on definitions in the courts as it pertains to 504 of the Rehabilitation Act is too vague and too broad, and those definitions that have been thrown into this bill are also too vague and too broad, and it ought to be pulled down into a little bit better language.

Another problem with the ADA bill that surfaced in response to objections of Members, Members have raised those objections to the provision in the ADA which would allow remedies for persons who believe they are about to be discriminated against. Not just that you are being discriminated again in employment or inaccessibility to accommodations. This bill allows anticipatory discrimination.

In other words, if you believe that you are about to be discriminated against, you can bring suit against those employers, or builders, or contractors, or bus owners, or mass transit facilities just on the fact that you think you are going to be discriminated against.

This issue was adequately addressed in the Judiciary Committee markup as members proposed an amendment that would limit the application of that provision to just new construction sites, so that when someone, a contractor, a builder, or a developer was about to build a building, and that building was not accessible, anticipatory discrimination could be alleged and brought to that builder, and he could correct the situation.

But that is not the case in my interpretation of this bill. This bill has wide-ranging effects on all kinds of businesses and buildings and parts of our society just under the belief that they are about to be discriminated against.

Another issue is essential functions. As introduced, the legislation states that the term "qualified individual with a disability" means an individual with a disability who with or without reasonable accommodation can perform the essential functions of an employment position that he or she holds or desires. Many have criticized the vagueness of the term "essential functions."

Senate report language states, "The phrase 'essential functions' means job tasks that are fundamental and not marginal." It also states, "In determining what constitutes the essential functions of the job, consideration should be given to the employer's judgment regarding what functions are essential as a matter of business necessity."

An amendment that passed the House Judiciary Committee markup put into the statute similar language as contained in the Senate report. It clarified that consideration shall be given to the employer's judgment as to what functions of a job are essential.

The business community advocates further clarification of that phrase as they fear businesses will be required to analyze different tasks of each job, and they claim this would involve a painstaking analysis of job functions in order to determine which functions are essential and which functions are marginal. They argue that most businesses do not have the staff to undertake such an endeavor.

We have suggested an amendment that says that if everyone that is being interviewed for a particular job is to perform a particular function, then that function is essential, and if present employees are performing a function of a job, then that is an essential function. And if the person that is disabled is qualified to perform that function, then they should not be discriminated against. It seemed like a reasonable approach to determine what is the essential function, and can that disabled person perform that essential function, but it was soundly rejected by those on the Judiciary Committee.

There are so many things in this bill that are so ambiguous and so vague, particularly, for instance, those terms in the bill such as "undue hardship" and "readily achievable."

In the Committee on Education and Labor version of the ADA, they define "undue hardship" as "an action requiring significant difficulty or expense," and "readily achievable" is defined as "easily accomplishable and able to be carried out without much difficulty or expense."

At issue is whether after taking specific factors of the case into consideration, further clarification of these terms is necessary. Efforts to place a fixed limit on expenditures required for accommodations have encountered strong resistance from both Democrats and Republicans, and in the Education and Labor Committee markup, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER] offered an amendment to limit the terms to 5 percent of the net annual profit for businesses with gross receipts of $500,000 or less. It failed by a wide margin.

If indeed this bill, as the proponents claim, will not cost anybody anything, then how could you be against telling a business owner that within these parameters you must comply and make your business readily accessible, and within those particular parameters; but yet, the proponents say no, you cannot do that. We are just going to say you have to do it, but you do not have to do it if it gives you an undue hardship, and you have to do it only in a manner that is readily achievable, and we are going to rely on case law, and we are going to rely on the courts to legislate and tell us what those parameters would be and those definitions would be.

I think we as Members of the House are duty-bound to write legislation as we see it and to answer questions that have been raised about these issues without relying on the courts to do so.

Speaking of this bill not costing anything, and we have attempted to correct or give business owners relief by proposing that if you are going to mandate these costs on business, then you should give business a tax credit to comply with this bill, and that tax credit has been soundly rejected by the leadership of this House, and I think it is the only fair thing to do. The proponents themselves claim that there is no cost to this bill, but I would like to enter into the RECORD an article from Insight magazine of May 7, 1990, written by Carolyn Lochhead, which is an excellent piece that was written on the costs of passing the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988.

She says:

Passage of the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 was swift, and its full implementation is set for next March. But the law has already begun to take effect nationwide. Builders who have secured building permits since January 13 are operating under the new rules. These require wheelchair accessibility to and through all new apartments and buildings with elevators and all ground-floor apartments in other new multifamily projects. Builders who fail to conform would face charges of housing discrimination.

As it turns out, the cost figures tossed about during the congressional debate—$27 here, $4 there—are in reality closer to $4,000 per apartment on average. What were thought to be simple definitions of access—"usable, maneuverable"—are instead the subject of debate. What are considered minor changes in construction—wider doors, larger bathrooms—could in practice scuttle thousands of apartment projects by raising the size of entire buildings and making many sites impractical.

Back in August of 1988, when Congress was about to pass a law requiring that new apartments be made accessible to the disabled, particularly persons in wheelchairs, Senator EDWARD M. KENNEDY, a Massachusetts Democrat, assured colleagues that it would add just $27 to the construction cost of each new apartment. Senator TOM HARKIN, an Iowa Democrat, further admonished skeptics who, he said, would tell 'a Vietnam veteran who has lost his legs * * * that 10 bucks or $4 to widen the door to a bathroom is too much' to spend to make housing accessible."

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELAY. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I think one other salient point that ought to be made on this particular issue is that those people who are not handicapped, who are seeking housing in those projects, are going to have to pay much higher rents and the cost of living is going to go up proportionately.

We certainly want to be concerned about those who are disabled and try to make an accommodation for them, but to raise these standards for every single housing unit to be built ups the cost of construction, and so that means that everybody who buys or rents those particular units are going to have to pay a heck of a lot more money, which is going to add to the inflationary pressures this country faces.

Mr. DELAY. The gentleman is exactly right. As Ms. Lochhead points out:

The preliminary drafts of guidelines from the Department of Housing and Urban Development—the final version is already more than a year behind schedule—promises to add thousands of dollars to the price of every new apartment covered by the law.

That translates immediately into higher rents, about 1 percent per month for each $1,000 in higher costs.

So the $4,000 increase in construction costs raises the rent roughly $40 per month. A task force that brought together the National Association of Home Builders and the National Coordinating Council on Spinal Cord Injury—led by the Paralyzed Veterans of America—estimated that HUD's draft guidelines would add $3,202 to $4,252 to the cost of each apartment in buildings with elevators and $1,288 to $3,666 to each ground-floor apartment in walk-up projects.

The home builders and veterans are seeking a compromise that would hold down those costs and achieve accessibility and came up with a detailed set of guidelines that lowered those costs to a range of $1,300 to $2,000 for mid to high-rise apartments and $674 to approximately $2,564 for walk-ups.

They contend their plan would achieve better accessibility.

We can't make developers build units that aren't marketable, that won't sell, and are too expensive, because that doesn't make for a deal and they won't enter into it.

So not only are you going to see higher rent, you are going to see fewer apartments built and less housing available because of these higher costs and, frankly, higher liabilities caused by just the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988.

You add to that the ADA bill this year, you are going to see incredibly high costs. Those costs, even if they are minimal as the proponents propose and as you saw quoted in that article, if they are minimum, then why don't we give business owners and contractors and people that have to comply with this bill a tax credit?

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, let me say before I make some comments on the same subject that we appreciate the leadership of the gentleman in the well on this particular issue. He has a well-deserved reputation for being a watchdog of small businesses, as is evidenced from his comments here today.

Mr. Speaker, this week, the House will be considering the Americans with Disabilities Act. I support the goals of this bill, which seeks to break down the architectural, communications, and other discriminatory barriers that prevent disabled citizens from full participation in the social and economic mainstream of American life.

But I also share the concerns that have been raised about the tremendous financial impact this bill will have on our country's small businesses.

Some 250,000 businesses in this country gross less than $350,000. Over half of these have profits of less than $30,000 a year from these revenues. It is the financial capabilities of these very small businesses that most concerns me, and which I strongly feel we should address as we consider this bill.

Let me point out some of the costs involved in various types of accommodations changes: $1,000 to $10,000 for a concrete ramp; $3,000 to widen and install a new exterior door; $300 to $3,000 to modify an existing restroom; and $300 to $600 to widen and install a new interior door.

When you couple these figures with the low revenue and profit numbers I just mentioned, it becomes clear just how devastating the economic impact of the ADA will be for certain businesses.

That is why an amendment providing for a small business tax credit to offset the compliance costs of the bill should be added to the ADA. Representatives FRED UPTON and KWEISI MFUME introduced a bill, H.R. 3500, that would provide such needed assistance.

H.R. 3500 would provide a $5,000 refundable tax credit to businesses of 15 employees or fewer that gross less than $1 million in revenue each year.

The credit would be applicable for costs incurred in removing architectural, communication, or transportation barriers in public accommodations, or in providing auxiliary aids and services to people who are employees of the small business, or using the public accommodation.

This measure has the bipartisan support of 197 Members of the House. What these Members have recognized is that many smaller businesses do not have enough revenue to take advantage of the $35,000 tax deduction that is presently available for architectural barrier removal.

Such an amendment to the ADA would very reasonably address and respond to the needs and realities faced by small businesses. The worthy goals of this bill will be meaningless if its requirements are not somehow rendered more financially achievable.

Let me point out that this civil rights bill is unlike any other type of civil rights legislation because of the costs it will impose on private employers and private owners of public facilities.

If we were legislating against discrimination on the basis of race or sex, for example, the regulated entities would not incur the types of additional accommodations expenses small businesses will be facing under the ADA. The fact that significant, measurable costs will result from this legislation is not in dispute.

Even the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which conferred on certain Federal and federally assisted programs the responsibility to accommodate Americans with disabilities, only covers those contractors and programs receiving Federal funds.

But the ADA would require private, nonfederally assisted entities to bear the costs of the mandated requirements.

It is because of the burdensome financial impact the ADA will have on certain covered entities that I feel our responsibility must extend to consideration of the economic ramifications of this bill.

A small business tax credit amendment is fully consistent with furthering the goals of the ADA. It is an improvement that will encourage and accelerate compliance with the ADA's requirements.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman again for yielding and again want to compliment him for his leadership on this particular issue.

Mr. DELAY. I thank my good friend, the gentleman from Texas for coming and participating in this special order.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has taken quite a lead on trying to protect the small business owners who are the backbone of this country and provide the economic gasoline that drives the economic engine that provides jobs and the standard of living for this country, and I think that its the person who is going to take the big hit on this bill because the person who cannot afford these kinds of changes cannot afford the lawyers to defend themselves against harassment by those who would bring suit for the slightest infractions in this particular bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I too want to join my colleague from Texas, who just left, in praising the gentleman in the well for his efforts in narrowing and cleaning up the language in this bill.

I think the key thing that most folks do not know is that the gentleman in the well, along with the three colleagues, one of whom in fact was me, the four of us went down to the White House a couple of weeks ago and specifically talked about the issue the gentleman is raising; namely, we do not want to have an attorneys' rights bill, we want to have a bill that helps the disabled.

I think through our efforts, frankly, for the first time, the White House agreed that the remedies problem for small business and big business or anyone else out there had to be fixed.

Mr. Speaker, I was privileged in the Committee on the Judiciary last week to be able to offer and have passed an amendment that at least narrowed those remedies to the same remedies that women and minorities have under title VII of the civil rights law of 1964.

So the effort of the gentleman in the well in leading our contingent down to the White House I think helped them to focus on some of the problems in this bill.

One of the other things that we had talked to them about that I had been concerned about was public safety in the workplace. I know the gentleman in the well and I and others were very aware of the incident that happened, I guess it was last winter, in fact in Kentucky where a Joseph Westbecker, who had presented a significant safety concern to his employer in Kentucky because of threats he was making against his fellow employees, was terminated. But unfortunately due to a disabilities clause that was perhaps broader drafted than we would like to see, he ended up back in the work place in Kentucky and then proceeded to kill seven fellow workers. He took a gun and just indiscriminately started shooting people.

That was a concern. It is one that the gentleman and I have raised.

I sent out a "Dear Colleague" letter that I think dramatized that point. Some people in my State may have misunderstood what I was getting at, but I think my colleagues understood it, and certainly they did in the Committee on the Judiciary, because we were able to get an amendment that very specifically limits that kind of incident and says, "If you are a significant risk to fellow workers in the workplace, the employer can terminate you or refuse to hire you." That is the responsible way that we work on this legislation.

The gentleman and I and others try to say that we are putting words on paper. We want to make sure the business community, the individuals out there, the bar, the bench, understand what we are doing. We certainly do not want to have Joseph Westbeckers running amok in the workplace, and we tried to put language in. It worked, and the White House agreed with Members, and the Committee on the Judiciary agreed with that amendment. Unfortunately, there are still some amendments that we are working on.

As I speak today, the Committee on the Rules is upstairs meeting, and hopefully will at least permit Members to have the ability to offer some further amendments. One of the things that we differ on from the Senate is that bills just do not come to the floor, so the gentleman and I in speaking today are trying to flag some of the loose ends in that bill. We cannot just get up and offer amendments tomorrow because the rule, and I put quotes around that, the rule that brings this bill to the floor will come out of the third floor Committee on Rules office with restrictions.

Now, I asked them today to put at least two more amendments on the floor of this House for Members to debate. I think they are very reasonable. One I did not push, and frankly, I did not push it because every single Democrat on the Committee on the Judiciary voted against it. It is a hypocrisy amendment. Here we are, passing a law that is going to govern businesses across the land, every school district, every county, every city, every State, every town, businesses that employ 15 or more people. Guess who the biggest employer in the United States is? I yield to the gentleman from Texas, if he would like to guess.

Mr. DELAY. I would imagine the Federal Government.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The gentleman is right, the Federal Government is the biggest employer in the United States. And guess who is specifically exempt from this law? The Federal Government—the U.S. Federal Government.

Now, that to me is the ultimate in hypocrisy, to say we are going to pass a law that is a neat idea, it is an important idea, it is one that is overdue, but by gosh, we are certainly going to put the Federal Government under that law.

The law specifically exempts the executive branch of government. It does, however, cover Congress, which is a rare, major breakthrough that we, at least, are passing a law that will control our own actions. I applaud that effort, but I did offer an amendment that was defeated 23 to 12 in the committee. As I say, it was a shocker to me that every single Democrat on that committee would vote to exempt the Federal Government from this law, and it is the biggest employer in the country. However, there is one other exemption, and I went after this one today. It is fascinating that we have an exemption in this law for golf courses that are member golf courses. We have an exemption in the law for country clubs, yet we do not exempt churches. Now, I read the first amendment, and it does not exempt recreational clubs, but it does say that religion and the role of churches in America has a constitutionally protected status under the first amendment. So, it seemed to me if we are going to say that a country club or a golf course that is private does not have to be under the ADA, that certainly we ought to extend that exemption to churches and church schools, because that creates the whole state/church problem that we can get into under the first amendment.

I have a letter of support from the Association of Christian Schools International, and they, along with some other groups, are concerned, frankly, that churches and church schools will now be engaged in this line drawing that the Members of this House who are in a country club do not have to worry about. I do not happen to be a member of a country club, I do not play golf, so it seems to me if we are going to take care of the Members who happen to want to go to their country club and not worry about the disabled, they certainly ought to draw the line and allow churches to have an exemption.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, after I followed the gentleman in testifying before the Committee on Rules, and some of the members of the Committee on Rules did not hear the gentleman present his amendment. I had a similar amendment in the list of amendments I had presented to the Committee on Rules, and therefore, they took me on for your amendment. I was not as well versed on the issue as the gentleman from New Hampshire is, and did a relatively poor job in defending the gentleman's amendment, but two of the members on the committee are very strong Christians, and one of them even claimed that it was very strange that we would even exempt churches from this amendment because that is what Christianity and Judaism is all about, is to bring all into the fold and not discriminate against anyone.

I do not think it is our position that we want churches discriminating against the disabled at all. However, there are situations in this bill, and the way I put it, and I will need the gentleman to expand on it, there are situations that could be created in this bill that would require churches to hire people that have no relationship to the tenets and to the beliefs that that church espouses.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the gentleman would yield further, I would be glad to further clarify that. I am sorry that with the comings and goings of members of that committee that they were not all there. I, of course, would have yielded to any questions from them. However, under title I of the bill, we dealt only with employment. It is currently in the bill that if the tenets of a church or a part of their religion requires them not to hire some person, they have an exemption. I am summarizing under the employment section of the bill.

The problem with that is that if a church says our religion says that we should not have to hire you, but the individual says they should, we are not engaged in court in arguing over whether that church does or does not have a religious tenet involvng that particular person.

I just think that if we are going to say that country clubs are exempt, they do not have to go to court and explain anything, certainly churches that are protected under the first amendment are also protected to make, frankly, an occasional erroneous decision. The gentleman and I may not agree with whatever that church's opinion is, but we are not here in the Federal Government to start telling churches where to draw the line based on their religious tenet. That gets into a complication that I think entangles Members in a courtroom, where it would be best not go get involved. I guess the theory is, if we are going to exempt somebody, and we exempt the U.S. Government, and we exempt country clubs, then certainly we ought to at least look at the religious exemption under title I.

So I am willing to go either way—either leave it the way it is, and exempt the churches, or strike the exemption for country clubs and golf courses in the Federal Government. However, we should not be setting up a two-tier system where the U.S. Government does not have to go to court and explain itself. Some will say yes, but it is already covered by the Rehabilitation Act, and it is true. A lot of the Rehabilitation Act language would mirror what is in title I of this bill, but it is not word for word. This bill has things in it that are not in the Rehabilitation Act. Yet the Federal Government says, as the biggest employer in this Nation, "We are out."

I guess what I was getting at, and I am sorry I was not there for the committee, is that really if we are going to exempt the U.S. Government, and if we are going to exempt country clubs, take a look at churches, because the one thing that we may disagree on as Members here, is religious matters.

I am not going to stand here and tell a church what its views should be. I may disagree with them. It is my right on Sunday to go or not to go, or to participate on Saturday, Friday, or Thursday, whenever that church has its services or whenever a religious institution, in the case of non-Christian faith, has its services. But that is not our role, and I think it just entangles us and entangles churches in litigation when we are exempting our own executive branch.

So I am sorry about this. Does the gentleman sense that the committee understood the distinction between country clubs and churches, or were they a little lost on the point?

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I sense that they were a little lost. They forgot the distinction between the private clubs and country clubs and churches and focused in on making sure that churches do not discriminate and making sure that churches provide accessibility under what they perceive as the church's tenets and what they ought to be doing anyway. But my point of view is that that is exactly what we do not want to happen. We do not want to pass a law that says to the church, "You believe this way, and if you don't believe this way, we will take you to court and hold you liable for the remedies provided in the bill."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman. The irony is that we are getting entangled with what the gentleman and I would both agree would be a church position we would not buy, but, on the other hand, we do not know what kind of a situation might come up, and only the bizarre cases are what we are going to read about in the newspapers in the years ahead. But somewhere there is a church or a religious institution or a religious school that wants to draw a reasonable line and is now in court trying to back it up in a way that the country club up the road or the U.S. Government office across the street does not even have to worry about.

I just think that if we are going to go about writing laws, certainly those institutions protected by the first amendment should be considered in a different way from the country club or the private men's club that some Members here may be members of. So it is one of those things that I hope we can address on the floor in the next 2 days, but we may or may not be able to do that. But I think it is going to be encumbent on those in the majority who control this place to explain why it is a good idea to exempt country clubs and why it is a good idea to exempt the U.S. Government, but, by gosh, we are going to make sure the churches do what we say even if we are not going to make our own Government do what we say. I just think that is ridiculous myself.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, one amendment that I did offer in the committee and that I offered again today and which I think points out another problem in the bill—and hopefully we will get some closure on this—is the whole area of law enforcement. As the gentleman from Texas knows, this bill covers sheriffs' departments, police departments, county law enforcement, including the Los Angeles Police Department and the New York Police Department. Everybody is under the bill.

The bill says that when you go to hire somebody, you cannot give them any kind of a test until you have offered them employment. You must first offer them employment. The problem with that is, for instance, based on a conversation we had with Dr. Sheldon Kay, who is the chief psychiatrist in the Los Angeles Police Department. Dr. Kay points out that in the Los Angeles Police Department, as in my own police department in the city of Concord and hundreds of police departments across the country, they try to prescreen people who may become a danger to public safety by giving them a psychological test. That seems very reasonable.

I served on a police standards and training council in New Hampshire, and one of the things we were hoping to do is encourage police departments to make sure that when they screen someone who is going to take a gun and be out on the street with a badge and with a uniform, they can handle the stress of a very difficult job. Police departments like to prescreen in most cases people who apply for work in law enforcement.

So this is a very simple amendment that would permit law enforcement agencies to give these psychological tests and prescreen people for stress and for their ability to handle a gun under a very difficult situation, and it seems like a reasonable exception. We are not talking about hiring people to work in a grocery store, and we are not talking about people working as parking lot attendants. These are police officers, and they have a tremendous decision to make, as to whether to unholster that gun or whether to use deadly force, and unfortunately some police officers are not as able to handle it as others. That has been the experience, and that is why they have invented these tests and come up with this battery of psychological testing. I certainly think we can all agree that if we can cover the disabled, we should also cover the mentally disabled, because some of them may or may not decide to apply for jobs as police officers.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I think we are also covering those who are compulsive liars or who are disabled under the definition of this bill. So you could have a compulsive liar having to be hired by a law enforcement agency.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I think the key is that we do not do anything that would interfere with a police department's reasonable choice to run a battery of psychological tests before they offer a job to someone, because here is the dilemma they would put a person in: A person would get offered a job under this law unamended; you would get offered the job because that is the only way they can give you the test, and maybe the test is scheduled for next week. You go home, you go to work, and you say, "Gee, I have been offered a job as a police officer," and next week you take the mental test and you flunk it. Now, where are you? Everyone asks, "What happened to your police job?"

You say, "Well, I got turned down because of the mental test." Now, that puts that person in a very embarrassing situation.

So the better practice is to give them the battery of tests, and then they can make their hiring decisions out of the pool of those who passed the physical, the mental, and the psychological tests.

That seems to me like a very reasonable amendment. Without exception, every Democrat voted against it. They said, "No." I just think that when it comes to law enforcement in this country, that is not an unreasonable amendment to put into this bill, when we are going to be covering, as I say, law enforcement across the land for police departments and sheriffs' departments out there who do like to conduct their business that way. So I hope we can protect their hiring practice and protect public safety at the same time.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman, through his amendment, pointing out some of the failings of this bill.

We might have the same argument, for instance, for air traffic controllers. That is a very sensitive job. An air traffic controller has hundreds of thousands of people's lives on the screen of his scope as he directs our airlines through traffic corridors. And there are many other sensitive type jobs. We have airline pilots, for instance, who have hundreds of people's lives in his control. There are many types of employment that we must deal with.

Certainly we have got the safety part of this bill covered; we have a safety consideration in the Judiciary Committee that is put into the bill. I think there are going to be many things to be considered and many questions answered about being able to prohibit putting unsafe people into jobs. There are specific professions that ought to be able to screen for these kinds of disorders before they would be offering someone a job.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELAY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to defer to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, who has been such a leader of this particular legislation, along with his colleague, the gentleman from New Hampshire, who just made such an eloquent statement on law enforcement.

There are a number of amendments that we have proposed, trying to clean this mess up, and I would submit to my colleagues and to anyone who is paying attention to our discussion that if they think the catastrophic health care bill which we passed and which was repealed was bad, wait until they get a look at this baby unless it is really cleaned up by amendments.

There are a number of things that I know my colleague, the gentleman in the well who is taking this special order, is trying to clean up through the amendatory process. I have four amendments that I worked on today and that we brought before the Rules Committee, and I would just like to briefly talk about those four amendments and have a little colloquy with the gentleman.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I would just warn the gentleman that we have only about 7 minutes left.

□ 1730

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. This is going to take about 3 minutes. That will leave the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] about 4 minutes to wrap up.

Mr. DELAY. OK.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Well, first of all, although the Americans with Disabilities Act is not intended to provide coverage for homosexuals, it could do so indirectly by giving ADA coverage of individuals who are regarded, quote unquote, as HIV positive, and with the prevalence of AIDS in the homosexual community it is easy to see how a court could conclude that homosexuals are a protected class under this act. This amendment would clarify that the ADA is in effect homosexual rights legislation, but stating that homosexuals are not deemed disabled because they are regarded as HIV positive.

Now the Committee on Rules had a little trouble with this, and I could not understand why, and my colleague and I talked a little bit about this. The reason that this amendment is important is that in New Jersey a private landlord who refused to rent an apartment to three openly homosexual individuals received criminal and civil penalties. Although it was not determined if they carried AIDS, a superior court ruled that homosexuals are entitled to special status as members of a group that are, quote, perceived as being handicapped, unquote, because of their high risk of acquiring AIDS. And so what you are doing is, because of their sexual preferences, you are inferring that they might be HIV positive, and you are going to give them special treatment under the Americans with Disabilities Act, and I think that most Americans would say we should not give special preferential treatment regarding disability to people just because of their sexual preference, and that is exactly what we are doing unless this bill is amended.

In addition to that, we are all concerned about the adoptive procedures that are included in getting children into the right kinds of homes. And we have found that this bill could allow a real problem in this area since past drug abusers, past alcoholics and, indirectly, many homosexuals are also considered disabled under this bill, it is necessary to include language that would allow an adoption agency to continue to use discretion when considering applications from such individuals. This amendment states that nothing in the ADA prohibits an adoption agency from refusing the adoption of a child by a person on the basis of that person's present or past alcoholism, drug abuse, or sexual practices.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is extremely important because we should make sure that we do not hamper adoption agencies' abilities to make sure that we put a child into a home that is perceived to be proper. We do not want a child put into an alcoholic's home, or into an abuser's home or into a home where it might get the wrong kind of direction in life. So, I think that this amendment is extremely important.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, this is very, very important, and I cannot understand why they would even look with disfavor on this in the most remote circumstances. For health and safety reasons it is important that the ADA makes special provisions for the restaurant and health care industries. My amendment states that an employer is not required to assign or continue to assign to a job involving food handling or health care any employee with a communicable or contagious disease.

Now I hope my colleagues will think about this. Do we want a person with a communicable disease, hepatitus, tuberculosis or AIDS, handling the food that is going to be consumed by somebody else especially when we know that the bodily fluids and the coughing and spitting might lead to someone getting those diseases from the food handler handling that food, and I think most Americans would say that we ought to make sure that the employer has some discretion in that, and, regarding health care workers, if you are in a hospital, and you are being taken care of, you do not want somebody who has hepatitus B, or somebody that has tuberculosis or AIDS coming in and working with you because you might be susceptible to catching that disease. If you have an open wound from an operation, and a person with AIDs is working with you and their bodily fluids get into that lesion or that cut, you could get the AIDS virus.

We just recently read in the paper here in Washington, DC, where two people playing soccer ran into each other. One had AIDS, and because of the collision the other got AIDS.

So, I think it is extremely important to protect people going to hospitals and restaurants by making sure the employer or the hospital has some latitude in their hiring practices, and that is why this amendment is important.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] who has shown incredible courage in pointing out the problems in this bill as it relates to the issues he just talked about, and those are just a few of the many that are in this bill.

There have been some 34, 35 amendments that I know of that have been offered to the Committee on Rules to clarify to exempt certain problems and to take care of certain problems that we have found in this bill, yet there is a demand from the disabled community and others that this bill not be amended. And I think the American people better wake up to what is about to happen because this bill has only been on its track only inside the beltway of Washington, and it is on a very fast track, and I doubt that many in America know what is in this bill and what will happen——

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one comment?

Mr. DELAY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. That is, when we passed the catastrophic health care bill, the senior citizens of this country very quickly saw the flaws in this bill and said, "You've got to repeal that turkey," and we did.

If this bill passes in its present form, many of the special interest groups will make sure we never repeal those very onerous provisions, and the American public will be hurt dramatically without any chance of appeal.

Mr. DELAY. Absolutely. I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON], and it is amazing to me especially when we have the chairman of the EEOC, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, traveling all over the United States talking about this bill and offering his services because by this bill he would become the lawyer for the disabled. If you ever were discriminated against or did not have accessibility to a place of business or a mode of transportation, you would go to the EEOC, and they would intervene on your behalf at taxpayers' expense while the business person or that mode of transportation at their expense has to defend themselves against this bill. So, we ought to at least have a bill that has defined who are the disabled and clarify how to comply with the bill, what is done in order to comply with the bill.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not do that. We are offering many amendments to take care of these problems, and, Mr. Speaker, I just urge the American people that are just now finding out about this bill to call their Congressman to let them know that they have concerns and make their Congressman at least read the mountains of material that have been sent to their offices asking certain concerns of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to add for the RECORD at the end of our discussion an op-ed piece called "Disabling the Disabled," by Dolan Shortley.

The article referred to follows:

DISABLING THE DISABLED

(By Maiselle Dolan Shortley)

Congress, in its infinite wisdom, is about to open yet another Pandora's box of judicial interpretation and intervention. The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) was written to prohibit discrimination against disabled Americans—a laudable goal. Its real effects, however, will be to stifle entrepreneurs, place stringent and unrealistic requirements on business and industry and create a backlash of public sentiment against the truly disabled.

Touted as an advance in civil rights, ADA is just another liberal, big-government approach to a "problem", the "solution" to which will only leave more problems in its wake.

This pending legislation stipulates that any business employing more than fifteen people would be subject to its vague and undefined requirements. Although the bill's parameters for compliance are nebulous, ADA is very specific in stating that it will apply to private businesses (even if they receive no federal monies), public accommodations, public services, telecommunications and transportation. The bill's vague language requires all these businesses to make a "reasonable accommodation" to employ the disabled unless it would place an "undue hardship" on an employer. What do these terms actually mean? No one knows, not even Congress itself. It will be only after millions of dollars have been spent in litigation that these terms will be defined—and redefined ad infinitum.

The bill even further broadens its parameters by allowing legal action on behalf of people who imagine they are "about to be subject to discrimination on the basis of disability." It also prohibits discrimination on the basis of an individual's relationship or association with a disabled individual, yet fails to elaborate on what is meant by this provision. Although businesses employing less than fifteen people are exempt from the employment provisions of ADA, these businesses can still be sued for discrimination by their customers, clients and even visitors.

And who are the disabled? The legislation is intended to cover 43 million Americans with one or more physical or mental disorders—roughly one-sixth of the population. ADA's proponents say there are over 900 separate categories of physical and mental disorders that will be covered. However, the bill fails to define fully which disorders it covers, or even which ones it doesn't.

The powerful disabilities lobby should be up in arms and outraged about ADA's language. As intended illegal drug users will be protected unless they pose a "direct threat" to the property or safety of others in the workplace (forget the profitability of the enterprise). So much for a drug-free workplace. Sexual behavioral disorders are not exempted from protection. A situation could be created in which someone guilty of a sex-related crime would be afforded special protection against "discrimination". As this legislation, the amputee could be placed on the same level as the pedophile, the blind on the same level as the transvestite. The consequences of this bill only trivializes the struggle of the truly disabled to attain equal opportunity and access, and places them in the same category with common criminals.

There is literally no telling to what lengths people will be forced to go to accommodate an ever-expanding definition of "disabled". Child molestation is a crime. If pedophilia is considered a disability under ADA would a child molester be able to reclaim his old job after being released from prison? Could he use his criminal record to obtain a job—at a day care center, perhaps—under the guise of disability?

Would a person suffering from the mental disorder of hypochondria be entitled to use the highly-coveted handicapped parking space?

Could the wheelchair-bound veteran lose his job because someone, suffering from a mental disorder, who applied first but didn't get the job, imagined that the selection was based on discrimination?

With its loose construction, vague language the ADA bill openly invites a massive wave of litigation, thus establishing the "Lawyers Full Employment Act". Now, you may scoff at the scenarios above, thinking that they could "never happen". But there is no language in this legislation that would prevent occurrences such as these.

Congress still hasn't learned that you cannot mandate equality. If Congress passes this legislation, it will impose economic hardships on business and industry and their employees which they can ill afford and will put truly disabled individuals in a disadvantaged and adversarial position. ADA hurts, not helps, the most vulnerable elements of society.

Setting aside the obvious reservations about giving the judiciary even more power over the daily lives of Americans, adverse decisions by the courts, placing stifling requirements on businesses, could foster severe hostility and resentment against the truly disabled.

The disability lobby is, for some inexplicable reason, at the vanguard of legislation that is going to hurt the very people it purports to represent. Why are they allowing themselves to be used as a shield for the radical civil libertarians' agenda at a grave cost to those Americans who are already achieving despite their handicaps?

Why, too, are so very few members of the Congress brave enough to stand up and say that this bill is nothing less than a Trojan horse filled with the shock troops of the left? Maybe it's because these self-proclaimed caring and compassionate legislators know they won't see the devastating effects of their handiwork in their Congressional offices because they have exempted themselves from this law.

UPDATE ON AIDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I will not be taking the full 60 minutes. I am just going to take a few minutes here to try to update my colleagues, and whoever may be paying attention, as to where we are with the AIDS virus.

As my colleagues know, the AIDS virus, Mr. Speaker, is off the front page of the paper, and people are not paying much attention to it. But the fact of the matter is it is growing very rapidly in our society, and we really do not know how bad it is.

An article in the Washington Post on May 6 pointed out that, and I quote,

A 25-year-old soccer player apparently contracted the AIDS virus as a result of colliding with another player during a game. Doctors said the two players crashed into each other during the game last December near Verres, Italy. The virus was apparently transmitted through serious cuts to the player's eyebrows and forehead, so through an athletic contest we had some people contract the AIDS virus.

Many of my colleagues have heard the CDC and HHS say, "You can't get AIDS through saliva," and yet not too long ago we find seven mothers in Russia who contracted the AIDS virus through the breast feeding of their child. Over in Russia, evidently because of the black market in needles, many of the nurses were selling the needles on the black market to other sources, and they would use the same needles over, and over, and over again to inoculate children against childhood diseases, these new babies, and one of the needles was contaminated with the AIDS virus, and they gave it to 7, 8, or 10 children, and these children, through nursing from their mother, gave seven of the mothers the AIDS virus through the mouth-to-breast contact.

So when the people at CDC and HHS say you cannot get it from saliva or other bodily fluids, they are obviously mistaken, and yet we hear CDC say you cannot get it through kissing, and on television we see these ads saying that condoms are a panacea for stopping the AIDS virus.

We hear kids in high school, there are high schools in this country that are now either talking about or actually dispensing condoms in the high schools to cut down on the likelihood of getting the AIDS virus, when in fact we know that condoms are not a panacea for stopping the AIDS virus.

We know from a study that in one study 30 percent of the people in the test study that used condoms got the AIDS virus anyhow; so we do know that it is not effective all the time.

We also know that you can get it through saliva and other bodily fluids. For instance, I just talked about the cases in Russia where the AIDS virus was transmitted from the baby to the mother through breast feeding. I was talking about the clinical study that found that 30 percent of the condom users became infected with the AIDS virus. It was apparent from these data and subsequent data accumulated that sero conversion in spouses using condoms still occurred.

Dr. William Haseltine of Harvard, an AIDS researcher, recently said, "Anyone who tells you categorically that AIDS is not contracted by saliva is not telling you the truth. AIDS may in fact be transmissible by tears, saliva, bodily fluids, and even mosquito bites."

Now, I know that is a horrible thing to think about, but Dr. Mark Whiteside and Carol McCloud of the Center for Tropical Diseases in Miami, FL, are absolutely convinced in Little Havana and Little Haiti down there that there are cases of AIDS being transmitted by mosquitos. I do not know whether it is true or not.

The whole bottom line that I have been trying to reach throughout these months and years of discussion on this floor is that the only way to know how serious the AIDS epidemic is is through a testing program. A person can get the AIDS virus and carry it within their bodies for 7 years, 10 years, and in some cases even more than that, without even knowing that they have it, so they are a walking time bomb. They have the AIDS virus. If they have sexual contact or their body fluids become involved with somebody else's body fluids one way or another, they can infect that person, even though they may not want to do it, because they do not even know they have the virus. So it is extremely important that we identify at least for their own personal safety those who have or do not have the AIDS virus in this country. Once we do that, we can tell them whether or not they have the AIDS virus, keeping this information secret, as secret as is humanly possible, and tell them that they can no longer have contacts with people outside the AIDS community, because if they do they will very likely infect someone else and cause them to die.

It is just as lethal to give somebody AIDS through that kind of sexual contact or other if you have the AIDS virus as if you would shoot them with a gun. So we need to inform people who have the AIDS virus after they are notified they have it through testing that they can no longer have contact with people outside the AIDS community. If they do it knowingly, and we do know of many cases where people knowingly went out and had contact with people outside the AIDS community for money, for drugs or for other purposes, if they do it knowingly, then they are a danger to society and should be extricated from society, just like shooting somebody in the head with a gun, because they are in fact putting people in a life and death situation.

We also need to do counseling with people who have the AIDS virus. We are not hard-hearted, those of us who want to identify the person who has AIDS. What we want to do is make sure that we protect the society in which we live, and the only way you can do that is to identify the disease, make sure the person who has it knows they have it, and make sure that they are not endangering the rest of society. That is what public health is all about. Once we identify the person who has the AIDS virus, we give them counseling, we give them some direction, we tell them we do not want them to have contact with people outside the community so that they will not be endangering the rest of society, and if they do, then we have to take more severe action.

The AIDS virus has been continuing to increase. In 1983, we had 4,200 cases of active AIDS.

In 1984, that more than doubled to 9,900 cases of AIDS.

In 1985, it went again over doubled to 20,000 active cases of AIDS.

In 1986, it went up by 75 percent to 35,000 cases.

In 1987, it went to 48,139 cases, almost a 40-percent increase.

In 1988, it went up to 80,538, a 67-percent increase.

And in 1989, it went up 47 percent to 117,781.

So far this year through March, we have had about 12,000 new cases of AIDS; so it is continuing to go up. We are going to have about 50,000 new cases of AIDS, it appears, 45 to 50,000 this year. And yet we are not doing anything to identify those people who have the disease so that they can stop having contact with people to endanger other human beings.

Imagine your daughter or your son going out with a star football player or a cheerleader who is in perfect health, but a year-and-a-half or 2 years ago they were involved with somebody who had the AIDS virus. That person they are going out with does not know they have the AIDS virus. They are in the pink of health, at least they appear to be, while inside their bodies mutating on a day-in and day-out basis is the AIDS virus. It is changing its composition from cell to cell and it is something that cannot be cured once a person has it. We think someday we will find a vaccination for it possibly, but a cure is unlikely, at least that is what most scientists tell us. But here is your son or your daughter going out with this person who appears to be in the pink of health. They fall in love. they have relations and before you know it your daughter or son has contracted the AIDS virus, not because of anybody's intentions being dishonorable, not because of anybody intending to give them the AIDS virus, but because they simply did not know they had it in the first place.

So I submit to my colleagues that we have a major pandemic brewing in this country that is not going to go away until we get down to the nitty-gritty, and the nitty-gritty is that we need a comprehensive program. We need education. We need to tell people in the schools, in the business places and places of employment in this country of the dangers of AIDS. We need to tell them that condoms are not a panacea for this disease and that you are still playing Russian roulette if you have sexual relations outside of a monogamous relationship, because they are not going to be 100 percent effective.

We also need to tell them that you can get it through other methods, such as body fluids.

We need also to tell them in this program that we are going to provide psychological assistance for those found to be positive with AIDS.

We need also to tell them that they can no longer have contact with people outside the AIDS community because they are endangering our society as a whole.

Now there are a couple other things that I would like to point out real quickly. We have seen some decisions made in various parts of the country that are of great concern to me. In New York City there has been a decision made which really is of concern to me and I think it could lead to a similar problem in other parts of the country, and I will read this article:

AIDS Tots Win City OK for Daycare

(By Lucette Lagnado)

Toddlers and preschoolers with AIDS will be allowed to attend daycare under a new policy announced by Mayor Koch yesterday in a dramatic break with city policy established in 1985. The mayor said AIDS-stricken youngsters should no longer be banned from nurseries and preschool programs, saying all children should have the same rights.

The problem is we know that AIDS is in every bodily fluid. We know from Dr. Haseltine from Harvard University that nobody can say categorically that AIDS is not contracted by saliva. He says that they are not telling you the truth if they say that.

He also said that AIDS may be transmitted by tears, saliva, bodily fluids, and other methods.

Now, here we have a city, the city of New York, saying that you are going to take children who are infected with the AIDS virus, toddlers, put them in the same nursery with healthy children who might scratch them, bite them, or get their saliva on all the balls and toys that they play with and then the children who do not have the AIDS virus who may have a cut or a scratch or a bite on them could contract that disease. It does not make sense. It simply does not make sense.

We need to have a lot more information about the AIDS virus before we start allowing these kinds of decisions to be made.

Of course, people say you cannot get AIDS from any way except sexual contact or through needles. There was an article published in Norway that I want to read to my colleagues real briefly and then I will conclude for the night and I will be back later on to go into the AIDS problem in a little more detail at some future date when it is not so late.

Here is what the article says:

"Studies by internationally known dermatologists in Norway and the Robert Koch Institute in Berlin indicate the AIDS virus is able to be transmitted through intact skin and mucous membranes via Langerhans cells:

"Langerhans cells occur in skin and mucous membranes, including oral, vaginal, and cervical epithelium. We therefore conclude that the accessory cells (target cells) for HIV are within these barriers themselves. The assumption that HIV infection occurs exclusively by the entry of virus through wounds in skin and mucous membranes into the blood can no longer be considered valid. Our results suggest that the Langerhans cells in the skin and mucous membranes are the primary target cells for sexually transmitted HIV infection. (L.R. Braathen et al., "Langerhans Cells As Primary Target for HIV Infection," Lancet, 7 November 1987, p. 1094).

"These and other findings indicate unequivocally that the exposure of undamaged intact skin or mucous membranes to live AIDS virus can result in acquisition of HIV infection. All medical workers, emergency care personnel including paramedics, firemen, policemen, and school teachers working with potentially infectious individuals must be informed of the serious risk of the exposure of intact skin to infectious HIV in blood, other bodily fluids and secretions.

"The recommendation for double gloving underscores the need for avoidance of any skin contact with potentially infectious bodily fluids and secretions."

The Center for Disease Control and Health and Human Services have told doctors that because of the porous nature of gloves, where they are working with an AIDS-infected person they should double-glove. Why are they telling them to double-glove if you cannot get AIDS through the skin? It is because they know you can get AIDS through the skin. Yet they are telling the American people you cannot get it through saliva or any other bodily fluids, only through sexual contact or needles. They are saying one thing to doctors and another thing to the American people.

The fact of the matter is we do not know all the ways which you can get AIDS. That is why we should err on the side of safety. Why should we commit millions of Americans to die with AIDS because of misinformation that is being given out through the media and the press? I think it is extremely important that the people know the facts. I just talked a few moments ago with my colleagues from Texas and New Hampshire about the ADA, Americans with Disabilities Act, which is going to be debated on this floor later this week. One of the things that that bill does is it is going to allow those who may have the AIDS virus and those who do have the AIDS virus to be involved in the restaurant business, in handling food, and also be involved in the health care business, handling patients.

There have been cases where they have actually discharged and won an award for discrimination in one hospital down in Louisiana where a person who had hepatitis B and AIDS was working handling patients, endangering those patients, no doubt. Because that person was taken away from that responsibility, he sued and he won an award in the courts.

If we pass the ADA in its present form without an amendment, what will happen is you are going to have people who have been infected with the AIDS virus and who have active AIDS working in hospitals and health care facilities and in restaurants handling food.

I do not believe the people of this country want that to happen. That is why it is extremely important that the people across this country, my colleagues, know of the dangers of the AIDS virus and how it can be communicated so they can pressure the health agencies, CDC and Health and Human Services and others, to have a rational approach to dealing with the problem.

In addition to that, they can help bring pressure on Members in this body to pass responsible legislation to deal with this pandemic that threatens the entire United States of America and the world.

The World Health Organization estimates that over 100 million people will have the AIDS virus and possibly die from it in the next 5 to 10 years. A lot of those people are going to be in this country.

It is estimated now by CDC that we have 900,000 to 1½ million people infected with the AIDS virus. They said that back in 1985 and 1986. The fact of the matter is, we probably have somewhere between 3 million and 6 million people infected. We have no way of knowing for sure because we do not have a routine testing program which we ought to have as part of a comprehensive overall program.

Mr. Speaker, I just say that we need as a nation to push for more education, more information getting to the American people, testing, a comprehensive program to deal with the AIDS virus, so the American people will know the facts and be able to put pressure on the people representing them to handle this in a responsible way.

The bubonic plague which took place in the 14th and 15th centuries wiped out over half of Europe. It was a communicable disease. It started out as a disease that was bacterial infection that was spread from a flea that bit a rat that then bit a human being. It later mutated into an aerosol which was spread through coughing and spitting.

That is not an unlikely prospect for the AIDS virus. We know that it is mutating inside carriers right now from cell to cell and can become airborne at some point in the future.

We do not want to have one-fourth or one-half of America wiped out because we did not do the responsible thing in the Congress of the United States or through our health agencies at the Center for Disease Control or Health and Human Services.

Mr. Speaker, I just say in closing we have gone in the past 6½ years from 4,200 active cases of AIDS to 130,000 cases of AIDS. We believe we have somewhere between 3 million and 6 million people infected, most of whom, 95 percent of whom, do not even know they have it. They are walking time bombs. Everyone who comes in contact with them physically is in jeopardy.

We need to help identify those people, counsel with them, educate the American public, and come up with a responsible program to deal with this. Otherwise innocent people in this country are going to continue to get the virus, the disease, and die, and it will be on our shoulders as a body because we have not dealt with this responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I will be back in the weeks and months to come to talk about and update my colleagues on this. I hope you will stay tuned.

ALLOW DISABLED AMERICANS TO BECOME FULL PARTICIPATING MEMBERS OF SOCIETY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMAS of Georgia). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NEAL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from Maryland, Mr. HOYER, for suggesting this discussion of the Americans with Disabilities Act, H.R. 2273 and S. 933. Tomorrow we will consider this long-overdue legislation which, if approved, will provide basic civil rights for disabled Americans.

Many of us have had handicapped citizens from our districts into our offices over the past few weeks and representatives of disabled Americans have done an excellent job of providing solid information on this issue. These brave people have eloquently stated the case for the ADA. And the basic point is this: we can no longer allow physical barriers to block the road to full participation in society by our millions of citizens who suffer disabilities. This legislation is a common sense extension of the historic 1964 Civil Rights Act. The history of this country is also the history of including more and more citizens as full participating members of society. The Civil Rights Act and related measures protect those rights and extend our democratic tradition. The ADA is the next logical step.

The senior Senator from my State of Massachusetts, EDWARD KENNEDY, has stated, "the ADA is a bill of rights for the disabled, and America will be a better and fairer nation because of it." I agree with Senator KENNEDY and would add that this legislation will open the door of opportunity to a large group of Americans. I would also add that our economy also will have a great opportunity to benefit from the addition of millions of potential employees to the workforce. This bill opens a new two-way street for business and disabled workers. With many jobs unfilled in cities across the country, we can look to the ADA as a way of bringing qualified disabled workers to these jobs. Senator THOMAS HARKIN, the Senate sponsor of the ADA, has said, "enacting the ADA is the right thing to do for people with disabilities. It is also the right way to strengthen our economy."

Mr. Speaker, the perception of our disabled citizens has changed greatly over the past 20 years. It used to be that if one had a major disability or handicap, they rarely left their home. Those days are gone. The will of these people and better technology has created a new generation of disabled Americans destined to fully participate in the workplace and the marketplace. Most businesses stand ready to make their facilities fully accessible to the disabled. The ADA simply puts into law reasonable provisions providing rights for disabled Americans. This measure has been approved by overwhelming margins in four House committees and the U.S. Senate. The President has stated his support for this kind of legislation. Tomorrow the House has the opportunity to make history by extending full citizenship to disabled Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues to vote for the ADA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMAS of Georgia). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

[Mrs. SCHROEDER addressed the House. Her remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. NAGLE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

[Mr. NAGLE addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

MY ADVICE TO THE PRIVILEGED ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, in continuation of some of the subject matter and remarks made yesterday, I want to comment on one of the frequently asked questions and commentaries made by journalists that frankly should have known better, and that is why is it that it seems overnight and all of a sudden we have a crisis known as the savings and loan crisis. And I have repeatedly pointed out since last year, as a matter of fact before that, in 1988, after the election, that those of us who had desperately and sometimes almost hysterically been trying to penetrate the level of consciousness first of our colleagues on the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, and the leaders thereof, and secondly, just the general population, could not get the time of day from the newsgathering sources.

During the campaign of 1988, it is worthy to note, none of the candidates or the parties, for that matter, made any kind of an issue of the financial, the banking crisis that should have been known to have existed in a virulent, and acute and critical stage since 1984. In 1988 it was obvious by May, at least it should have been obvious to those sitting on the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, and it certainly was to me coming from Texas where it seemed that the general opinion was that the problem was restricted, it was wholly a Southwest United States and particularly Texas problem, and the notion was afoot that rooted in the depressed economic situation of the oil and gas industry that this was just one of those concomitant end results.

However, since 1985, 1984 particularly, but 1985 especially when the regulator known as the Chairman of the Home Loan Bank Board, Mr. Ed Gray, attempted to communicate to the Congress, through the committee, and had difficulty. This is how I met Ed Gray. Now he was the Chairman of the Home Loan Bank Board, and even though I was and had been since 1981 the ranking majority member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, you would never have thought that that amounted to more than just being some lowly member of the committee. In desperation I had a phone call from Mr. Gray resulting from his only appearance, his first appearance, I think it was in late 1984, before the committee in which I suggested that he appear again with the specific figures as to the need for recapitalizing the insurance fund for the savings and loan industry known as FSLIC. He was denied that opportunity, and he then called me on the phone. I invited him and we had breakfast.

At that breakfast meeting he told me very forthrightly that the insurance fund was in effect in an actuarially unsound condition.

Then, a few weeks later, and in fact if I remember correctly by then it was 1985, the suggestion was made that if Chairman Gray were to be asked to appear that he do so in camera; that is, in executive session, closed doors. I have been a constant, perennial and permanent enemy of closed-door meetings ever since I served on the first legislative body, the local legislative body known as the city council of San Antonio, and particularly when I went to the State senate of the State of Texas. The constitution in Texas provided for specific instances in which the senate was compelled to meet in executive session, but those were spelled out, and there was good reason and precedent for that.

But the idea that the business of the people, which had an immediate and a dire connection with their general well-being, should be held only under conditions of secrecy, has been abhorrent and continues to be so to this day to me. So I protested and said that if the idea was to have a voluntary appearance in camera that I would object to that. So then I was overruled, and the decision was made to bring Mr. Gray in.

Before this we had had the then Chairman of the FDIC, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which is the insurance fund for the commercial banking system. The reports then were that there were troubled banks. Nobody wanted to say how many, nor did the Chairman then feel that there should be any public discussion. So there had been another private meeting with the then Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which I objected to also. I pointed out constantly that there was nothing ever adduced by way of testimony or documentation in these private hearings that could not be heard openly, and all of the doors and windows open, and I kept repeating that, and have constantly noted that whether it was on the local area or the State area, whenever we had secrecy it was not because the people wanting secrecy were looking at the greatest interests of the greatest number, it was because there was something being sought to be done quickly, fast. And I said then and I continue to say that fast government is dangerous government. If something is good, and something is desirable, why should it not be preached from the rooftops, why secret?

And it was the inability of that question being answered that constantly has backed me up in my insistence that public matters be publicly arrived at. And the reason why last year's consideration by the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, under my chairmanship, of the FSLIC bill would be under conditions, as I said then, of open agreements, open covenants openly arrived at.

Obviously it succeeded because even though there had been dire predictions that with a committee the size of ours—which was 51 members—we would not be able to pass out that bill. We did and did it in record time.

I think the record ought to show also that in that one bill we handled four distinct areas that had taken in the 1930's three different Congresses and four different bills to do.

We did it all in one, plus something new, still very tenuous, still in the process of exploring and blaying a path. That is, what to do with the nearly $400 billion overhang of what is known in this jargon as REO's [real estate ownerships]. A tremendous, huge volume, a mixed bag of business, of residential, of commercial properties that have now fallen into the lap of Uncle Sam or the taxpayer.

So that, one, we must go back to see where we are coming from, where they are going; and two, where we must head. Since we have not, and have not done that and continue not to do it, in other areas over which this committee has no jurisdiction, as I said yesterday, such as tax policy, such as jurisdiction over the securities and investment bankers who today are actually performing all of the traditional customary banking services of what used to be called the commercial banks.

So that confronted with this tremendous buildup of neglected, either overlooked or not looked at by design, problems, the accumulation of which, as I pointed out yesterday, now becomes an almost unmanageable problem, and unless the Congress—and I must remind my colleagues on the majority side that whether we will or we won't, we are the majority and we are the ones who are supposed to be in control of governing and setting the rules, appointing the chairman and directing the membership to these committees—that time is on us, that no longer can we be afforded the comfortable and complacent attitude that we could do business as usual.

We have got, somehow or other, to acquire some cooperative, common-based approach cutting across jurisdictional lines as they have been interpreted in the past with relation to these three basic committees, because failure to do so will mean that all we will be doing here, as I said yesterday, will be to constantly be rearranging the deck chairs on the Titanic and no more, because we have a situation that no longer is amenable to total control with what we do domestically.

The world has developed to the point, and our leadership through the years, particularly since the Roosevelt Administration, has not at one time given thought to long-range visions and projections and planning in a world that has turned out to be so unpredictable and revolutionary, accompanied also with tremendous technological, radical, revolutionary changes. Instantaneous electronic communication, the mass production of new fibers that have revolutionized the variety, supply and diversity of products, made them available in quantities and in diversity never dreamed of before the war.

There is no way I could evoke to my colleagues—I think now the average median age here is of a quantity that would preclude evoking memories that I would not have the power or the words to be able to evoke. How can I evoke to my colleagues a world that had no television, that had no instantaneous communication? Radio, even, was still in a very pioneering stage of development.

That was the world, the framework of which gave rise to the basic legislation that now has the dead hand of the past weighting down whatever it is we are struggling to do today.

The 1932 act—and I would like to remind my majority Members that one, known as the Home Loan Board Act was a Herbert Hoover action, and it was not until he left in 1933 that you had the implementation of the subsequent acts that rounded out the Home Loan Bank Act such as the FSLIC legislation of 1933, the amendments of 1934, and then the basic banking act of 1935.

Here we are in the late 1970's and the early 1980's grasping again, fragmentarily as if we are trying to grab a fistful of sand on a beach and it just filters through our hands as the water hits it.

That is exactly what has happened because no thought was given after the war to the burgeoning differences, the contraction of the world. The things that you said to have a repercussion in terms of months and years were now taking place in a matter of minutes and less than a day's time, so that be that as it might, this was the backdrop.

There were some voices, including mine, there were others that I recall when I first came to this Congress some 29 years ago, and in the intervening years soon after that, and in the early and middle 1960's. I used to sit right here and listen to some of my colleagues who preceded me, who had some seniority.

One in particular I constantly think of, the Honorable John Dent of Pennsylvania, who would take this floor, and I remember how Members would scoff and jeer and laugh and say, "Oh, there goes John Dent again."

Now, what was he telling us? He was saying, "Americans, we are losing our industrial productive base. I come from the steel-producing area, and let me predict where you are heading. You are heading to converting this great area of production, the center of industrial power, the steelmaking power, facing what will be inevitably, if this tide continues, the Rust Belt."

He was scoffed at, but his words were in the record. There was no TV coverage or anything like that, and John Dent was not the kind of guy playing for the audience. He was trying to convince his colleague on his own committee and off the committee that, with the changes and the incursions of competition, of the inability of America to have foreseen the type of developments that were rising in the midst of the emerging countries, the revival of Europe.

I recall one of the first issues after I was sworn in, was the John Kennedy round of GATT. I remember, and I had had no closer friendship with any President than I had with President John Kennedy. My friendship with him went back to 1951, long before I ever thought I would be in politics. I met him as he was a very young-looking Member of the House. The way I met him was that he was supposed to address a conference on the first trip I ever made to Washington as a head of the delegate of the Alamo Area of the National Association of Housing Officials.

Part of my great, great privileged experience had been to have worked on so many levels—3 years as the assistant director in charge of land acquisition, and family relocation of the San Antonio Public Housing Authority under the great Marie McGuire, who had been brought in from Houston in a reform that we had. The Housing Authority had been victimized by the political element, had been used as sort of a gravy train, and as a spoils for the victors in the city elections. Miss Marie McGuire came in, and we developed this 3-year, forward program, after we had had a referendum—a bitter one, but which we won—and had the greatest expansion program in public housing construction of any city in the State of Texas. San Antonio was in the forefront of public housing. Texas was very, very hard, tough territory. As a matter of fact, it was not until I got to the Texas State Legislature and the senate after my election in 1956, in my first session in 1957, that I introduced the enabling legislation for slum clearance, urban development, and urban renewal for Texas. Texas had resisted it for 12 years. No bill had succeeded. That was one of my first real genuine victories as a freshman member of the senate. I succeeded in getting it out of the senate, but that is another story. However, it was the first, and it was not until 1957, but until we had amendments, for instance, that prohibit—to this day it is still part of the interval enabling legislation, that under no circumstances could any land acquired for the purpose of urban renewal be used for the purpose of construction of public housing. So it was this kind of obstaclization that I am familiar with, and therefore gained the experience to discern. So I served 3 years, learned perhaps more than a combination of several university degrees, and among other things, successfully relocated 454 families without so much as an eviction order. While pridefully and proudfully showing that each one of those families ended up in safe, wholesome, sound, hygienic environment, and in an area in one project alone that had been known as the death triangle area because it was there that San Antonio has the questionable reputation of having the highest rate of infant mortality because of infant diarrhea of not only the whole country, but even comparing favorably to some of the lesser and more benighted nations.

It was in that area where we had this horrible, horrible thing going on. San Antonio had been known as the tuberculosis capital of the world. I might say, by way of some parentheses here, parenthetically speaking, that being sensitive to that, when we were the first in the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development, to notice what today is called homelessness, on December 4, 1982, that I realized that we were getting into a critical situation with respect to shelter that was somewhat similar to that which faced Americans after the war, where because of the lack of construction for 4 years, the lack of providing shelter, and our country still growing, as it still is, we had a real housing crisis. We had doubling and tripling, which we have today. In this surrounding area to Washington and the suburban area, we have single-family units that are housing as many as two and three families right now. Why? What rental unit that is safe and decent and has basic necessities provided of a safe and decent environment in this area can a family with an income of $20,000 to $25,000 or $30,000, rent today without paying as much as 50 and 55 percent of their income, which is wholly untenable. It is so perverse that it takes everything I have, and certainly during the last 9 years to keep from getting totally demoralized, because after going through those struggles in the Depression, where people were dying around us of tuberculosis, some of the memories I have are of my mother giving me a pint, a quart of milk, to take across the creek to the other side of the creek, as we called it, to a second cousin, who was dying of tuberculosis. And indeed, died, as well as every single member but one of that family, in a shack, right in the shadow of the great county hospital, the public eleemosynary hospital of the county—right in the shadow. Pit privy, dirt floor, no running water, except a common drinking fountain for five other families, and one pit privy for the five families. Is it a wonder we had the tuberculosis crisis? Mind, Members, that was long before anybody thought we would be in a war, and that during the war we would develop such things as the antibiotics known as penicillin and the other therapeutical drugs that have been developed to target in on the TB bacillus.

So, sensitive to that, when we got the statistics first in this area and then throughout the metropolitan and dense areas of this country of overcrowding, I then communicated with the Atlanta Centers for Disease Control. Sure enough, the statistics they gave me, and this is over 5 years ago, but certainly as late as 5 years, I was still communicating, in the District of Columbia what we called the "homeless" area, but actually meaning the dense area, the incidence of tuberculosis has gone over in excess of 21 percent. These are cases reported. How many are not reported? In Boston, in the same areas, 23-percent increase. Why? Because these are diseases that are highly communicable in overcrowding, and in impoverished areas—malnutrition, plus overcrowdedness, and the quick spreading of that bacillus. We went through that crisis, and I recall how there was the same specter in the hagridden minds of the people who feared tuberculosis. We had the same thing now with AIDS. We had a near hysteria where people feared that breathing the air they were going to get the tuberculosis. Later, we had the same thing in the post-war period with respect to venereal diseases. We had the same kind of hysteria. We could sit at some dirty toilet and get venereal disease. So we have the same kind of ignorance now with respect to the current hysteria. However, all of that connects with what is reflected in the basic framework of reference that has to do with the economic and the financial well-being of the people, issues that had haunted the Nation since it started as a nation.

Mr. Speaker, I think so many of my colleagues forget that the first 10 years of national existence of our country was a situation where such offices as President were not even thought of. We had the 10 years of the First and Second Continental Congresses and the Articles of Confederation. The issues then were no different basically. They were microscopic compared to what we have today in this very, very complicated, societal world, not only in our country, but throughout the whole world.

Mr. Speaker, the question was financing. All national entities, as well as organizations, as well as individuals, have to have their finances and their bankers.

So, the question arose: How were the Continental Congresses going to do it? The bankers in Philadelphia were only too happy to accommodate, as they always had been. However, Jefferson, and, if any of my colleagues want to know what Jefferson thought of bankers, I invite them to read the annals of the papers, and commentaries, and speeches and writings of Thomas Jefferson, as well as others, and even Alexander Hamilton, who was a centrist and who is what today would be called a—well, no, I do not know—he might not be called—he was for strong central government, but he was, above all, a sound financier, and even he recalled and said, "you fellows want to us to come in. You want to hold us in bondage with interest rates that are absolutely unacceptable."

So, Mr. Speaker, it was not until the Congress chartered—and I am talking about the First and Second Continental Congress—the Bank of North America imposed an interest limit, no more than 6 percent.

The bankers did the same thing they did almost 200 years later with the advent of World War II, and there again I want to remind my colleagues: Why is it that today the Government has to borrow at such inordinate and usurious rates of interest that, no matter what we do here, as I pointed out yesterday, just since the enactment of the so-called Gramm-Rudman Act, 1986, the debt has grown by a trillion dollars. Why? Well, I will point it out.

I was a bitter opponent of the Gramm-Rudman Act. But let me again point out to my colleagues especially on the majority side that it was us on the majority side that made it possible. In the Senate incredibly we had Senators like TEDDY KENNEDY, PROXMIRE from Wisconsin then, LEVIN of Michigan, all supposedly very liberal. They went along. In the House it took 130 Democrats to make it possible, though we did delay the original version that came from the Senate. And I was one of those that had a lot to do with its delay.

However even then it did no good to point out that the bill was so radical, and it was such a harsh legislative enactment, violative of all legislative precedents, that I took the well and pointed out that 50 percent of that was unconstitutional. The Congress is going beyond. It was acting ultra vires, as they say in law. It was going beyond its scope, and it was invading other areas that were not within our constitutional prerogatives.

To no avail. We were accused of being partisan. We were accused of just being spenders and not wanting to do anything about controlling the debt and balancing the budget.

Well, President Reagan promised and committed himself in 1980 to balancing the budget before the end of his term in 1984. But during Mr. Reagan's term the national debt increased by $2 trillion.

So, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues, "Who's kidding whom here?"

We are all in a delusion that I just shudder to think what the consequences can be. I am not predicting, because I am not that smart. All I have ever been known to do is know how to add and figure.

I studied engineering before I studied law, and so I have a tendency to interpret things from both the inductive, as well as a deductive, reasoning process, and I always look at the mathematics of things, and, if they do not add up, I say so until proven wrong.

Now I am open to be proved wrong, but, if I am not, I will never yield. I will never yield, and that is why I did not.

So, Mr. Speaker, what happened? In less than 60 days after the passage of Gramm-Rudman and the signing of the Gramm-Rudman bill into law by the President, the Supreme Court indeed knocked out 50 percent of Gramm-Rudman's bill as unconstitutional and as an excess, an improper invasion of Congress.

So, what did we get left? Well, Gramm-Rudman was supposed to have its first effective action on March 15, 1986, when, with great ado, it was announced that it would reduce the debt by $15 billion from January to March 15. I took the floor and pointed out that on that same day the enhanced interest charges to service the debt were increased by $30 billion and, therefore, vitiated the $15 billion and added an additional $15 billion to the debt. Nobody seemed to give a hoot, nor has anyone since then.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am giving my colleagues the statistics. I am telling them that since the enactment of Gramm-Rudman the debt has gone up by a trillion dollars plus. And since the Reagan administration, a total of $3 trillion, but just in that 8-year period it was $2 trillion plus, so that it is necessary that we understand what, if any, is the connection.

For years and years the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board would come to the committee and say, "Well, you know, if you want to blame anybody, it's you, the profligate Congress, that won't control budget outlays, and it's a deficit."

What were the deficits? Lyndon Johnson had more, rather than less, years with the budget in the black. He did not have a deficit until Vietnam. And when Carter left office, and he was pilloried for even after the seventh year, and it was one of the atrocious aspects of President Reagan that I detected, and that was that he was blaming Carter for everything. When the American people voted him in in 1980, they agreed, but they voted him in so that he could do something about it. Instead of that, at every turn, in order to justify whatever temporary obstruction he saw, or somebody pointed out or some failure, it was Jimmy Carter. That was because of Jimmy Carter's prior Presidency, and I think it is a shame for us now to say, "Well, we've got to overlook all of this. We've got to forget the causes," because that will make it look like we are being partisan.

Therefore, we must think in terms of what can we do right now to just nullify and keep on making the American people feel good, that something is being done and that we are all hunkydory and we are still the great leaders of the world and that we are not in any manner, shape or form, under any kind of danger and vulnerability.

So in shorter form yesterday I tried to point out what some of us had tried of foresee, and in foreseeing offered anticipatory action.

In 1985, after that secret appearance of Mr. Gray saying, "Well, look, the insurance fund is broke. We are headed for a lot of trouble. How many S&L's now are in dire trouble."

Now, mind you, this was before there was any so-called reform action as last year and segments of the industry who had gotten everything they ever requested of the Congress, I cannot remember one time until last year that the industry lobbyists and proponents did not get everything they want from the Congress. I cannot remember in the case of the banking industry where any bill that was proposed by say the predecessor chairman, the great Wright Patman, if the ABA, the American Bankers Association, was not for it ever got past the committee.

So what is the end result? Well, I gave you statistics last evening. The whole issue, and I want my colleagues to understand this and the citizens of this great country, it is not a question of whether you are going to bail out the S&L's, bail out things, even though it is true that they have been the biggest relief recipients in the history of this great country or any in the world, and that is what it has been.

No longer does any President scare me by talking about welfare cheats and talking about how some woman went to a grocery store and bought with food stamps a bottle of vodka, when at the same time he enabled the most powerful and wealthy interests and combination of wealth and plutocrats to escape taxation, $755 billion in 5 years, that is how much the U.S. Treasury lost.

Of course, the Congress did it, but I will remind my colleagues that the key critical issues on this House floor in 1981 in the summer were won by four votes, despite the then much maligned Democratic leadership which saw what the issue was.

Well, who is referring to that today? Who is saying that because that same bill was the reason why all these predators, the Milkens, the Keatings, the Kravises, the Roberts, the Kohlbergs, came crawling out like a swarm of cockroaches when you turn the light on and you see them scurry, except this time they came out because the bait was that great appetizing tax bill that said that if you get into the most indulgent, speculative mania, not only will you not pay taxes, but you will get tax rebates, thanks to the generosity of the great U.S. Treasury.

Would it not be great if a failing tailor or grocer in my city could go to the U.S. Treasury and say, "Hey, look, I failed, so now I need a tax rebate. I need a little tax goody here, some revenue, because I failed, or I got into this crap game and I lost." This is exactly what they have been doing on Wall Street.

Wall Street no longer reflects the honest industrial manufacturing and production activity in the country. All it is doing is recording paper transactions based on paper transactions based on pyramids of paper transactions.

How long, oh, how long can that kind of a situation last? It has been prolonged only because in the Reagan years with Reagonomics we had the foreign money paying and buying up and funding our debt.

Well, that is interesting. You have the vanquished suddenly being the redeemers of the conquered. Well, that is news.

I think it is obvious today that some of these aspects have been more or less questioned. For instance, I noticed in the business page of the New York Times a little article. It is on page 13 of the forum page in the business section, Sunday, May 13. The headline of this article is, "Are Japan's U.S. Auto Plants Unfair?"

The subheadline: "The jobs are low-quality, imports keep coming, and few U.S. parts are used."

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Times, May 13, 1990]

ARE JAPAN'S U.S. AUTO PLANTS UNFAIR?

(By Owen Bieber)

Last February, the Chrysler Corporation announced it would close an assembly plant in St. Louis. This was the 18th major American assembly and stamping operation closed (or slated to be closed) by Chrysler and the General Motors Corporation since 1986.

Some of the contraction within the automobile industry reflects manufacturing efficiencies and production transfers to newer plants. But most of it is directly related to the huge expansion of assembly operations transplanted to the United States from Japan. In the last eight years, Japanese automakers have added 11 new plants and the capacity to assemble more than one million vehicles in North America. Another 1.5 million units of capacity will come on stream by 1992.

This represents an unprecedented assault on our nation's industrial core for two reasons.

First, Japanese auto companies are not using their transplanted capacity to replace automobiles imported from Japan, but to expand their total share of the American market at a prodigious rate. For the 1990 model year, Japan's share of the American new car market is 34 percent.

Second, although the new transplant facilities are highly efficient, much of their cost advantage over Big Three plants results from tax deals, training grants and other incentives from states and localities. It also results from lower fixed health-care and pension costs associated with a new and generally younger workforce. The transplants are not winning on a level playing field.

The Bush Administration remains oblivious to the devastation of our most important manufacturing infrastructure. Administration officials believe market forces will show the way, but they are wrong. Our government has a responsibility to help steer this critical industry to a secure future.

The goal should simply be to utilize American assets in the automotive industry as fully as possible and strengthen those assets in the process. In the short term, government policy should be focused on the following four areas.

Market share. Transplant output should be offset by cuts in direct importers to stabilize import market share.

American content. Japan-based assemblers must sharply increase the American manufacturing content of their vehicles. Only 38 percent of the parts they assemble are made in North America. In addition, established American parts-makers deserve a fair shot at supplying Japanese assemblers both here and in their home market.

Technology transfers. The Japan-based transplants have created relatively low-skilled jobs for American workers while keeping advanced technologies and jobs in Japan. Engineering functions and drivetrain and other sophisticated manufacturing operations should be transplanted here.

Reciprocal commitments. American auto companies should be asked to invest at home, produce vehicles covering the full range of market segments, and price those vehicles competitively to win back market share.

Given the pervasiveness of laissez-faire thinking in Washington, even these modest proposals will strike some as too radical.

Let me add since I have been on the Banking Committee when I came to the Congress 29 years ago, I have been in the midst of every single so-called bailout situation that has developed, beginning with the New York Penn Central Railway, the following Lockheed Corp. bailout, then the city of New York so-called bailout and the Chrysler Corp. In fact, it is Chrysler that was the prototype and it was I who placed the clause in to make sure that after Uncle Sam came in and did what the bankers would not do, because the bankers did not have faith that Chrysler was going to turn around. Chrysler needed $3 billion. It had $2 billion and it could not get bank credit for that other billion. So the bankers said, "Well, you know what, sure. If you will get a guarantee from Uncle Sam, why yes, you can have the money, but you have got to get that guarantee."

Fortunately for us, among us we had faith in Chrysler, because involved in that above all was the human element, over 20,000 American workers; but I also knew that there was a little escape hatch there in case Chrysler made good, the Government would not have to pay out anything on the guarantee, but then those corporation heads, Mr. Lee Iacocca, was going to come in and get the gravy, too, instead of letting it go to Uncle Sam as it should have.

So I foresaw that and I had a little clause in there, but sure enough, after the first year, lo and behold, Chrysler not only did not have to borrow a dime or did not have to make good on the guarantee, did not take a dime's worth of the taxpayers' money. In fact, in a matter of 3 years it had brought in almost $3 billion to the U.S. Treasury; but above all, it had maintained American workmanship and a labor force that I felt was absolutely essential that we back up, and we did.

But always, as the First Bank of North America effort and has happened, the only difference that has occurred is that since Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman, and particularly during the Eisenhower regime, the bankers were able to move in full force. They turned everything around, even including the management of our debt where we are paying compound interest, compound interest right now.

Right now the American taxpayer is paying over $260 billion a year just on interest. I have not heard anybody talk about debt management.

Going back, when Kennedy was inaugurated for the first time, when I came up 1 year after that, I could dip into my pocket, get a dollar bill, and more often than not that dollar bill would say U.S. Treasury note.

What do you see today when you pick up every one of the bills today? Federal Reserve note.

Do my colleauges know, does the taxpayer know, that since the Congress abdicated its constitutional right and responsibility you are having to pay interest just to print this dollar bill, which is not a Treasury note? It is a Federal Reserve note.

What is the difference? What is behind all of that? Well, it is not that complicated. Bankers and financiers like to make a lot of mumbo-jumbo, but it is not that complicated. It is the same old story, and that is that greed and the predator always have been present in every society at all times in human history, and this is the reason governments are established, to protect the national interests for the citizen.

The American people have not had that kind of protection at all. In 1952, in a little rider, you had a little minor change. As a result you had a very big difference in the way the debt was handled and the borrowing.

How could Franklin Roosevelt have conducted a war, given the leadership to wage and win that war, with lesser powers than our committee and the Congress in 1971, in October, October 30, to be precise, gave President Nixon? Total control over our economy. That had never been done in the what, in the so-called Economic Stabilization Act. In common words, wage and price controls.

Now, who were the ones fighting that? Liberals, like me. Who were the ones insisting that that had to be passed without a comma changed, even in amendment where I have said Mr. President, you are getting power that even Hitler and Mussolini did not get from their parliamentary bodies, at least not in the beginning, an which no President at time of war or peace has ever gotten, including Roosevelt and Truman, two wartime Presidents.

How was it that Mr. Roosevelt and his great Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Morgenthau, could finance that borrowing at 2 percent or less? Well, I will give you a little history.

When the need became obvious that you would have to issue bonds, liberty bonds or whatever they called it, the bankers came in and said, "Well, yeah, you know, unless you pay us, we are not going to get into that. We are not going to buy unless you pay this big interest."

Roosevelt, not an expert, got very excited and concerned and called in Morgenthau. He said, "Hey, look, what are we going to do? You know, this is really terrible. We are in a pinch. We have got to borrow. We have got to wage a war."

Morgenthau said, "Okay, that is all right, Mr. President."

So he announced that if the bankers refused, then the Treasury was going to do that which the Federal Reserve Board Act of 1913 said, and still says, that the Federal Reserve Board is the fiscal agent of the U.S. Treasury.

Can it be that now when it is printing our money? Of course not. The Treasury is a footstool and the Federal Reserve Board is the master, with Congress exerting no control, because, gosh, don't impair the independence of the Federal Reserve Board, even though it is the Congress that created the Federal Reserve Board.

So on top of that where has it led us? Like the S&L and the banking industry that has come to Congress and gotten everything it has asked for, where did they end up? Where have we ended up? A broken down system, and an inordinate and unjust burden on the taxpayer.

Where has the Federal Reserve Board gotten us, its most important function, as the equivalent of the central banker of our country? The biggest debtor nation in the world. The value of the dollar sunk by 50 percent in just the last 5 years.

You mean a weak dollar is a good thing? About 3 years ago, it will be 4 years this summer, we had some of the top economists, and they were coming in. It could have been 3 years this next summer. They were telling our committee that it would be a good thing to let the value of the dollar drop.

So I had 5 minutes to ask a question, and I asked him, "How far do you think the dollar ought to be permitted to drop?"

He said, "Well, you know, we can't give a precise figure, but in order for us to be competing with importing nations and be able to sell our exports at competitive prices, we have got to let the dollar fall. It has been overpriced."

I said, "Well, by how much?"

"Well, you know, in relation to the other currency."

I said, "How much? How are you going to control that? Suppose the dollar has a free fall?" That is still a danger. "Who controls that?"

We have lost the power to determine that because external forces, outside the shores of our country, now have the power that can undo whatever it is we do domestically. Today, as of at least 4 or 5 years, that means even the power to control interest rates.

Why is that? Because in order to create the illusion that we have prosperity, that our debt was being taken care of, we let the foreign countries come in and invest, foreign investment interests and financial interests. But that is fickle. They came because interest rates were permitted to jump up inordinately high. Of course, they come in, they invest, and they make a killing.

But what happened just about a month ago when West Germany said, "Ah, you know what? We think we will let the interest rates kind of creep up," meaning some of that money will come back.

Immediately you had a hysterical followthrough here. About a month, a month and a half ago, the Treasury was having a great dilemma. It went to market in order to try to borrow. All of a sudden the Japanese were reported as not being interested in continuing to buy those Treasuries. But the Japanese had bought 35 percent. They owned that much of our most valuable Treasury securities.

The Continental Illinois Bank in Chicago, why did this big bank go under? It seemed as if the S&L crisis happened overnight.

Not at all. The immediate underlying cause was going back to other things that were happening in the banking industry, going back to the bust in the oil and gas section of the country where those institutions had gone out on a limb, on so-called energy loans, and then they borrowed up with the Chicago, which had been a big source of credit for the time being for the Southwest. But it was the fact that these foreign investors pulled their money out overnight that was the immediate cause of the failure and the nationalization because we, the Government, had to take that bank over. We still do, at a cost of what, $5 billion, $6 billion. I did not hear anybody moaning then.

We had hearings in the committee. I did not belong to the subcommittee but I went to them anyway. Lo and behold, they brought up the fact that they had these multimillion-dollar golden parachutes for the guys that had failed, a $2 million pension for the immediate past president who had failed so miserably.

But what was Mr. Volcker, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, saying? He said the Chicago Illinois Bank is too big to let go under, so we are going to pay every depositor including the 4 million deposits, including the American millionaire depositors, so what we have done, and this is the nub of the matter, while our banking system has been more and more brought into the allocation of banking credit, not to fire the engine of industry and manufacture and production, but to venture into the speculative, risky things. I brought that out 11 years ago in the case of the Hunt brothers of my native State of Texas, then billionaires, you know, the Earth shook when they walked, and I brought out here on this House floor, and it was the reason, one of the reasons I presented an impeachment resolution, even though it is questionable that the Federal Reserve Board can be defined as a Federal agency. The Federal Reserve Board is not a Federal agency. It is wholly a creature of the private, commercial banking system, but in practice is actually the footstool of the eight or nine biggest banks in the country.

What we have adopted in the Congress is the doctrine of infallibility when it comes to the Federal Reserve Board and bankers. Who, politicians? Why, we should not even try to touch them. They have to be independent. But where have they gotten us?

In the case of the Hunt brothers they tied up over $25 billion worth of bank credit allocations in their futile attempt to corner the silver market in Europe. Can you imagine, that bunch of functional illiterates from Texas thinking they could go to the most sophisticated, 500-year-old experienced hands of the silver and gold markets in Europe and that they could outwit them.

So I brought out how there was supposed to have been a secret meeting, until I made it public. Between whom? Nelson Bunker Hunt, the head of the First City Bankcorp, at that time, now known at Citibank, Mr. Wriston, and Mr. Paul Volcker, who holed themselves up in a hotel in Florida to see how the bankers could be bailed out of this big dilemma they had with Mr. Hunt.

I brought out and said what banker in the United States would not give his right arm to be able to bring the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board to confront his problems.

THE AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this time and am glad to discuss briefly the Americans with Disabilities Act. Then I will yield some additional time to my good friend, the gentleman from Texas.

The Americans with Disabilities Act will be considered on the floor of this House this week. It is a bill which has gone through much discussion. It passed the U.S. Senate in September of last year, on a vote of 76 to 8. It is a bill which seeks to extend civil rights to those in America who are disabled; very late. There are some 43 million Americans, with a disability, and for too long they have not only felt but actually been shut out, discriminated against, unable to get employment, unable to utilize transportation, unable to utilize communications, unable to use public accommodations that we take for granted on a daily basis, such as the local cleaners, or the local bank, or the local drug store.

One of the criticisms of that bill was that there was not much debate in reference to it or discussions about its particulars. It passed the Education and Labor Committee on November 14, 1989, by a vote of 35 to 0, a show of bipartisan, overwhelming support for the concept that it was time to extend the rights that America promises to all its citizens to pursue the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness in a society that prides itself as having as it hallmark the extension to very individual, irrespective of their race, or color, or wordly condition, or social status; the ability to pursue what their talents and what their character give them the right and the ability to pursue.

The Energy and Commerce Committee some months later, in March 1990, considered this bill, and the Energy and Commerce Committee focused on two very important aspects: the ability to get on a commuter rail and go to work, whether that's in Washington to Baltimore, or the suburbs of New York City, New Jersey, Chicago, Los Angeles or any other metropolitan area, and to have that transportation system which is absolutely vital to becoming employed, and therefore having the ability to support oneself and one's family. The access to transportation was a controversial issue which required much debate and discussion, but ultimately, the Energy and Commerce Committee, passed the ADA 40 to 3—only 3 members opposing.

So at that point in time 75 Members of the House had voted for the bill and 3 had opposed it, again an indication of overwhelming bipartisan support, and a recognition that this bill's time has come, that it is important for our country that we extend access to our disabled fellow citizens.

The Public Works and Transportation Committee shortly thereafter again acted on the bill, and that committee was also interested in transportation, in commercial buses. That bill was passed out of the Public Works and Transportation Committee 45 to 5, again, overwhelming, bipartisan support for the most important civil rights act since the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Most recently, the Committee on the Judiciary, dealing with public accommodations and other matters, passed this bill on a vote of 32 to 3. Let me add that one of the key facets of the Energy and Commerce bill is to make sure that the hearing-impaired and the speech-impaired will be able to use a device that most of us take for granted in daily life, and that is the use of the telephone.

Those of us who are not hearing-impaired and who are not speech-impaired, should stop to think for just a minute about how that would adversely impact on us if we could not use the telephone.

So after those 9 months and four committees later, 152 Members of the House had voted to overwhelmingly support this legislation, and only 11 have opposed it to this point.

At this time I would be glad to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], who I know is a strong supporter of this bill and who has himself been such a champion for civil rights in this country over the last four decades, before he got to this House and as a Member of this House.

It gives me a great deal of pleasure and honor to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my very distinguished colleague from Maryland, the chairman of the Democratic caucus, who has so preeminently exerted that leadership. I deeply appreciate his allowing me to proceed here.

First I want to compliment the gentleman in the well and his colleagues who have worked indefatigably in behalf of the legislation he has just alluded to.

I think it is obviously, like last week's legislation which we had this report of a threatened veto by the President, having to do with child care, that in these areas the Congress is properly responding to a real need that is emanating from the midst of our society.

We had tremendous demographic, that is societal, changes in our country. We have women in the work force who now exceed the number of males today; if I recall my statistics, 55 percent.

Mr. Speaker, I can recall the day when it was unthinkable that a woman would be working. About the only ones that were considered eligible were widows who had a sheer necessity to go downtown and work as clerks in some department store. But it was unthinkable that a female would be having a career and would be working.

I can remember that. My memory is pretty good. I can remember that it was the war that brought out the tremendous contribution that always has been there, should have been there, should have been tapped generations ago, in the war production.

While the men enlisted like never before, 14 million Americans in uniform, and went across the seas and fought, the women went into the factories. They met the President's goal of producing, I remember, the astronomical figure of 50,000 warplanes and tanks. You had Rosie the Riverter in posters prominently displayed all over the work plants and factories in the United States.

It was the women, it was the women who made the United States what Franklin Roosevelt had described as the arsenal for democracy.

So the child care legislation, my goodness, how could we turn our backs on that legislation last week? We should have had solid support.

As it was, you had quesitons that the vote would indicate that it was not veto-proof, et cetera, et cetera. But the need was there. The committee had exhaustive hearings.

In this case here, in behalf of that segment of our population—after all, a civilization is going to be judged by how it treats its weaker, its poorer, its more helpless elements in its society.

So I wanted to congratulate our distinguished chairman here and the members of the committees that have produced this legislation which, hopefully, we will be considering tomorrow or perhaps maybe Thursday. But I for one, no matter what my own sentimental notions may be or my proclivities or philosophy, I have always felt it was necessary to go on the factual presentation, adducing the testimony and the facts and the figures. And I think the gentleman in the well brought it out clearly here. I think that the figures he gave about how it is being universally supported, overwhelmingly supported, is a clear indication.

Now, if the gentleman is still willing to allow me to continue on his yielding to me, I would like to kind of round out my earlier subject matter, if it meets with the gentleman's approval. Maybe he did not have that in mind when he yielded to me.

Mr. HOYER. How long does the gentleman think he would be? I would be more than happy to accommodate my friend.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I am afraid I am going to have to have the gentleman limit me because I could possibly go on to the time of the expiration of his time, and I certainly do not want to do that unless it is within the gentleman's own desire.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentleman—I know that what he has to say is important—that perhaps we might need his comments tomorrow for the purpose of keeping the legislative process in action.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
	(Mark one square only)

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

[Omitted in printing]

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

DOUG BEREUTER ON CZECHOSLOVAKIA

HON. HENRY J. HYDE
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, during the Easter recess I traveled with some of my colleagues on the House Intelligence Committee to Eastern Europe. Among the nations we visited was Czechoslovakia, and I must say we were all captivated by this beautiful country and its people. Seeing first-hand the results of the "Velvet (or quiet) Revolution" left us with some vivid and lasting impressions.

We were fortunate to have as a member of the delegation, DOUG BEREUTER, who has a remarkable grasp of Czechoslovakian history, as well as its current affairs. DOUG probably represents more Czech-Americans than any Member of Congress, and I have always found his thoughts on Czechoslovakia and Eastern Europe worthy of special attention. With that in mind, I would like to insert in the RECORD two articles he wrote recently for his Nebraska district news column. They are essential reading for anyone interested in getting a better understanding of what is happening in Czechoslovakia and the implications that has for the United States.

A VISIT TO PRAGUE, CZECHOSLOVAKIA

(By Representative Doug Bereuter)

Last week during the Easter recess I traveled to Prague, Czechoslovakia, with other members of the House Select Committee on Intelligence, and I want to share some thoughts and information on the situation in that democratizing nation. While all Americans are enthused about the move toward democracy, pluralism, market-oriented economies, and better human rights in the countries of eastern and central Europe which have been dominated by the Soviet Union, I know that the many Nebraskans of Czech and Slovak heritage have been particularly interested and thrilled by what has happened in their ancestral homeland.

Since I probably represent more Czech-Americans than any member of the U.S. House, and since I serve on the House Foreign Affairs Committee where I emphasize trade matters, I have always followed matters related to Czechoslovakia more closely than any member of Congress. That is the reason why I have amended pending legislation to give our businesses and agricultural firms the export tools they need to do business in Czechoslovakia. They want our exports, services, and our involvement in joint ventures. That is good for them and good for employment and income of Americans. This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, and we don't want Western Europe to capture all those markets and opportunities.

On April 12th, while we were in Prague, a U.S.-Czechoslovakian trade treaty was signed. That action, which I had been urging since the Czechs' "Velvet Revolution" began in December, will normalize trade relations between the two countries. Thus ends our estrangement with Czechoslovakia, which began when the Nazis marched into that country.

What are conditions like in Czechoslovakia today? Much already is obviously changed from 1984 when I last visited parts of that nation with a trade mission. This time I only visited the capital, Prague, a city of one and one-half million people, but I am pleased to report good and improving news. The joy and enthusiasm with their new freedom from the oppressive Communist government is obvious on the faces and in the actions of the average Czech one meets on the street. It is obvious that their spirit was not crushed by the Soviet tanks in 1968 or by 50 years of oppression. I believe one can also expect that their entrepreneurial skills and zest for democracy, human rights, and pluralism, which were so evident to the world between the World Wars, will re-emerge.

While economic conditions and the standard of living are far below those in West Germany, Austria, and the United States, and nearly all of the other nations of Western Europe, they are by no means desperate. They probably lag behind only East Germany among what was the Communist bloc. Food is a bit expensive, but it seems to be readily available and in good variety.

On the other hand, their technology and communications systems lag about two decades behind our own, and their once-formidable industrial base is largely obsolete. People commonly joke about putting in two or three hours of work during their eight-hour days in a system of business, industry, and agriculture which is government-owned or collectivized perhaps to a greater extent than any of the other European countries which have been satellites of the Soviet Union. The worst news is the environment. Like the other nations of Eastern Europe, the problems of air and water pollution and hazardous waste are very severe. The result is that mortality rates are substantially worse than a decade ago.

My trip reminded me again that Prague is perhaps the most beautiful major city in Europe, with a magnificent collection of architectural gems from many centuries and in many styles. It's blessed with a beautiful setting, escaped war damage during the 20th Century, and was dressed up in its best spring vegetation.

Czechs were already joined in their pre-Easter shopping and festivities by large numbers of affluent West Europeans who were making an easy visit to this city, which has largely been off the major tourism list for most westerners during their lifetimes. Indeed, if you have any desire to visit the ancestral homeland or just see beautiful Prague, this is the time. Tourists get double the normal exchange rate at hotels for shopping sprees. Prices on such specialties as Czech crystal are never going to be as low again. And, the average Czech and their leaders clearly like Americans.

By the time you read this article, Pope John Paul will also have completed a two day trip to Czechslovakia. Since the Vatican and Czechslovakia only restored their post-war relations on April 19, and since two-thirds of the nation's fifteen million citizens are Catholic, his visit was widely anticipated. The severely repressed Catholic and Protestant clergy are now being permitted to resume their normal roles as members of a clergy free from governmental restraint. They no longer will be subject to very frequent imprisonment or the banishment from their churches to the most menial of jobs.

Czech leaders from President Vaclav Havel down agree, however, that the "Velvet (or quiet) Revolution" which they amazingly pulled off without bloodshed in late 1989 was the easy part. Now comes the hard part of reforming the economy, restoring participatory democracy, and rebuilding relations with the Free World without the full cooperation of entrenched communist bureaucrats—all of that, too, without upsetting the Russian bear or disappointing their citizens who are very eager for change. Watch for my article next week with information on the task ahead, on rebuilding Czech-American relations and on what our Intelligence Committee was doing in Prague.

LAUNCHING THE NEW CZECHOSLOVAKIAN DEMOCRACY: A HELPING HAND FROM AMERICA

(By Representative Doug Bereuter)

Last week I wrote a column entitled "A Visit to Prague, Czechoslovakia," which was motivated by my visit to that beautiful city during the Easter recess as part of a House Select Committee on Intelligence trip. In it I attempted to set forth briefly my impressions and some facts about the democratization now underway after "The Velvet Revolution." I examined the revitalized spirit of the Czech people, the living conditions, the work ethic, the economy, the poor conditions of industry and technology, the severe environmental problems, and the state of religion and the clergy. Now, as promised, I will focus on the tasks ahead for Czechoslovakia, suggestions for restoring strong and friendly Czechoslovakian-American relations, and the purpose for the House Intelligence Committee's official trip to Prague. I'll discuss the latter first.

In Czechoslovakia, as in the other Warsaw Pact countries undergoing democratization, we are very interested in what is happening to the huge internal security/intelligence apparatus and to their agencies which are oriented toward collecting foreign intelligence through espionage and other techniques. What happens to those organizations and their leadership, and to their military components, obviously has important national security implications for us.

Also, we are particularly interested in how many of the strong institutional and personal links remain with the Soviet KGB and its military counterpart. Let me just say the changes are dramatic in Poland, East Germany, and Czechoslovakia, but a high degree of uncertainty, fluidity, and potential for instability exist. It is also a much more complex environment for espionage recruiting and for sorting our intelligence friend from foe and spy from double-spy.

Beyond those interests on our part, the new Czechoslovakian government is understandably uneasy about the loyalty and behavior of many of the members of the secret police (STB) and other internal and external security forces. Many of these people were clearly communist ideologues. President Havel sent 14,000 members of the STB home, promising to keep them on full pay only until August 1st. He told them, in effect, "Sit by your telephone during normal business hours, but don't call us—we'll call you."

Both the new leadership in the Federal Parliament and Security Minister Richard Sacher inquired about our experience in the Congress on the oversight, budgeting, and civilian control of the intelligence agencies and the military.

However, a major examination, sorting-out of personnel and restructuring of these and other Czech agencies awaits these new democratic leaders if they are to maintain control and sustain their democracy and new freedoms.

As for the military, Czech-Soviet negotiations have resulted in a promise to have all Soviet troops out of Czechoslovakia by at least mid-1991. The Havel government also intends to reduce its national army.

In addition to effectively bringing its military under civilian control, it also has begun the difficult task of depoliticizing the military—no small task in a communist-style military structure. President Havel and Foreign Minister Jiri Dienstbier are actively promoting their concept of a 35-nation European Security Commission to eventually replace the Warsaw Pact and NATO—including the U.S. and Canada.

Now, what can Americans do to assist Czechoslovakians with their difficult political, economic, environmental, technological, and other problems? The first thing to recognize is that the dominant responsibilities necessarily fall upon the Czech, Slovak, and Moravian people of their nation and on their institutions, initiative, and inspiration. Secondly, it is important to remember that President Havel in his address to the U.S. Congress said, refreshingly, in effect, "we don't need financial aid, we need improved trade and other interactions with the West, and we need your technical and educational advice and assistance to help ourselves." And, third, it must be emphasized that the full load for even this type of assistance should not and will not fall on America as in the case of the Marshall Plan at the end of World War II. The prosperous nations of Western Europe, Japan, and other developed nations must take a large role. President Bush has asked the European Community (the 12 "Common Market" nations) to take the lead in coordinating Western aid to the emerging democracies of Eastern and Central Europe, and they accepted.

For brevity I will list some of the major specific proposals for assisting Czechosolvakia or improving our relations with that nation which are proposed in a bill which passed the House Foreign Affairs Committee last Thursday:

1. Technical training and assistance for developing a market economy and democratic institutions—in the skills of agribusiness, commerce, entrepreneurship, finance, science, pollution control, business and government administration and management, auditing, accounting, drafting of legal codes and regulations, and other relevant areas.

2. English instruction by the U.S. Peace Corps. Volunteers will begin arriving in September.

3. A whole range of cultural, scientific, faculty, educational, "young political leader," and other exchange programs.

4. Scholarship programs for study in the U.S.

5. A 10% participation by the U.S. in the proposed Eastern European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD).

6. A full range of business information, trade and development, and loan guarantee programs for U.S. businesses competing with other Western countries for export markets in Czechoslovakia. (A trade agreement was signed two weeks ago to give Czechoslovakia normal tariff status.) Our two-way trade is currently only a miniscule $150 million annually.

7. Assistance in privatizing or de-monopolizing some of the many state-owned corporations that dominate production and employment.

Much of this assistance is to be delivered by the U.S. Agency for International Development (now headed by Dr. Ron Roskens) through contracts with private voluntary organizations and with U.S. businesses and educational institutions. In addition, the U.S. will liberalize its regulations on the type of technology it will sell Czechosolvakia after safeguards are installed against the transhipment of critical technology to the Soviet Union or other countries where we retain greater export restrictions. We also have agreed to support the location of the EBRD in Prague, and its membership in the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. The U.S. also plans to re-open its long-closed consulate in the leading city of Slovakia—Bratislava, and to open U.S. Information Agency cultural centers in both that city and Prague.

I hope this information on Czechoslovakia has been interesting. Americans with ancestry in that wonderful country must be particularly proud of the peaceful but dramatic way the people of that oppressed nation have reclaimed their democracy and are striving to secure the full range of personal freedoms.

Their re-emergence as a participatory democracy which is severing the yoke of Soviet domination also means a greater prospect for a peaceful Europe and the prospect for reductions in their and our defense budgets. Their economic and political progress and the progress of the other emerging nations of Central Europe is vital for a stable Europe heartland. That makes nuclear or other warfare far less likely for them and for us as a NATO ally. We also now can see much greater opportunities for trade, travel, and cultural exchanges between the people of two nations resuming an old and important friendship.

PRESIDENT BUSH REITERATES SUPPORT FOR PUERTO RICO SELF-DETERMINATION AND STATEHOOD

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I wrote to the President in March of this year after the Subcommittee on International and Insular Affairs completed 3 extensive days of hearings in three cities of Puerto Rico and after hearing some question the level of commitment of the President to actually allow the people to choose a status preference. After all, the President had not publicly commented on the issue since his February 9, 1989 address to the joint session of Congress when he stated:

There's another issue I have decided to mention here tonight. I've long believed that the people of Puerto Rico should have the right to determine their own political future. Personally, I strongly favor statehood. But I urge the Congress to take the necessary steps to allow the people to decide in a referendum.

During the many times I have met with the President since his statement, he has remained unwavering in his fervent commitment to the self-determination of the people of Puerto Rico. I have been fortunate to hear the energetic tenor of his voice and see the proud sparkle in his eyes when he has talked of providing an opportunity for the United States citizens of Puerto Rico to choose a closer relationship with the United States. In order to allay any doubts that may have arisen regarding the President's commitment due to unfounded rumors often started by speculating political pundits and social analysts, I asked the President to clarify in writing what I already knew to be true.

The following is the response I received from President George Bush:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, DC, May 9, 1990.

Hon. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB: Thank you for your letter of March 21.

I strongly believe that this is the year when our nation must move to allow our fellow citizens in Puerto Rico to choose their political fate. We owe it to them as a people and to ourselves as the leader of the Free World. How can we applaud the exciting and momentous movements toward freedom in Eastern Europe, Latin America, and elsewhere while refusing to grant to our own citizens the right of self-determination?

This is why I wholeheartedly support legislation to give the people of Puerto Rico the right to vote on the three principal options for their political future: statehood, continued status as a commonwealth, or independence. I further believe that we should have enough faith in the principles of democracy to let their choice be self-executing under provisions that Congress may prescribe.

My own view on the political future of Puerto Rico is well known: I want it to become the 51st State. The 3.3 million citizens of Puerto Rico deserve to be full members of the American Union, for whose freedoms (and those of other nations) Puerto Ricans have fought so courageously in all of the wars of this century. Before statehood or any other status can come about, however, the people of Puerto Rico must have the right to express their own views on their future. That is why I urge the Congress to act this year to allow a binding plebiscite on the island next year.

I look forward to continuing to work with you on this important issue.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

TRIBUTE TO HOLY TRINITY R.C. CHURCH, PASSAIC, NJ, ON ITS 90TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the deepest reverence and the greatest sense of pride that I rise today to salute an outstanding house of worship in my Eighth Congressional District which, for almost a full century, has been a spiritual focal point and a beacon of faith for countless numbers of worshippers in the greater northern New Jersey area.

I am speaking of Holy Trinity R.C. Church of Passaic, NJ, which is celebrating its 90th anniversary in 1990. This landmark occasion will be observed with a mass and an anniversary dinner in the church hall on Sunday, June 10, 1990. I know this event will be a great source of pride to the spiritual leaders and guiding hands of Holy Trinity, copastors Msgr. John E. Morris and Father Walter Pruschowitz, who are ably assisted by Father Wayne Varga.

Mr. Speaker, as a means of providing you and our colleagues with a look at the rich background of this fine church, I would like to insert for the RECORD the official history of Holy Trinity R.C. Church:

Ninety years ago, on Trinity Sunday, June 10, 1900, a small group of German speaking residents, noting that area churches had their own "language parishes" agreed to petition Bishop Winand Wigger of the Newark Diocese to establish a parish to serve the needs of the growing number of German Catholic immigrants in the area. They had been attracted by the opportunities for employment provided in this locality by the textile industry.

The committee approached the Bishop a few weeks later when he was in Passaic to bless the cornerstone for the new St. Joseph's (Polish) Church. He agreed to establish the new parish and appointed Father Valentine Clebowski, pastor of St. Joseph's to serve as temporary pastor. Services were conducted at the old St. Joseph's Church located at Quincy Street and Parker Avenue. In August of 1902, Father Joseph Hasel was named the first pastor of Holy Trinity and by September of 1903, the parish had its own chruch at the corner of Hope Avenue and Jackson Street. This church served the needs of the parishioners until 1924, when the present Holy Trinity Church was erected at the corner of Hope Avenue and Harrison Street adjacent to the present parish school which opened there in 1907. The original school was located in two rooms behind a barbershop on Hope Avenue, thus deriving the name "the barbershop school".

Pastors who served Holy Trinity throughout the years include: Fr. Edward Schulte, Fr. Bruno Bloemeke, Fr. Peter Werne, Fr. Henry Veith and the present co-pastors, Monsignor John E. Morris, and Fr. Walter M. Pruschowitz ably assisted by Fr. Wayne Varga.

For the last 90 years Holy Trinity has served not only the descendants of the original founders who stemmed mainly from Germany proper but also the many other German speaking people who came to this country from an area that includes the easternmost province of Austria (the province of Burgenland); adjacent areas in Hungary; the Sathmar district in present day Romania; and the Militic area ("Militich") in present day Yugoslavia and people of other national backgrounds as well who have come to this country seeking a new, better and freer life.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to present a portion of the history of this distinguished parish that has remained dedicated to helping others and guiding them spiritually. As Holy Trinity R.C. Church of Passaic, NJ, celebrates its 90th anniversary, I know that you and all of our colleagues here in Congress will want to join me in extending our warmest greetings and felicitations for both the service and guidance it has provided for its community, State, and Nation.

SAVE THE WHALES

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I, along with several of my colleagues on the Foreign Affairs Committee, are introducing a resolution today calling for sanctions against nations which continue to kill whales in violation of the International Whaling Commission moratorium on commercial whaling.

The IWC moratorium took effect in 1986, but permits a nation to take whales for legitimate scientific research. Strict guidelines were established to ensure that nations would not continue to engage in commercial whaling under the guise of scientific research. Some nations, including Japan, Norway, and Iceland, have continued to kill whales maintaining it was for scientific reasons, but their research plans have been found invalid by the IWC. In addition, resolutions condemning their activities have been adopted at IWC meetings.

The President is authorized to impose sanctions in nations which violate IWC rulings and continue to kill whales. Specifically, the Packwood/Magnuson amendment provides for a reduction or denial in permits to fish in U.S. waters, and the Pelly amendment allows for an embargo of fishery products.

Japan was certified in 1988 under both amendments for diminishing the effectiveness of the IWC. While permits to fish in U.S. waters were denied in 1988 and 1989, no embargo of fishery products was imposed. In addition, no sanctions were imposed on either Norway or Iceland, although their whaling activities were on a much smaller scale than those of Japan. Moreover, Iceland has indicated it will not take any whales this year.

My resolution calls on the President to implement the Pelly amendment embargo on fishery products and take other steps to stop the illegal killing of whales.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has strongly and consistently supported the IWC and the moratorium. Enactment of this resolution will strengthen our commitment to whale preservation by ensuring that the continued killing of whales is not without substantial risk. I am making available to my colleagues a copy of the resolution for their support and cosponsorship.

H. CON. RES. —

Whereas the United States fully supported the adoption by the International Whaling Commission of an indefinite moratorium on commercial whaling to become effective in 1986;

Whereas the United States fully supported the adoption by the International Whaling Commission of resolutions designed to establish criteria for reviewing proposals by Commission member nations to take whales under special (that is, scientific) permits during the commercial whaling moratorium;

Whereas the United States has supported all resolutions adopted by the International Whaling Commission requesting nations engaged in "research" whaling that fails to meet the criteria established by the Commission to refrain from carrying out further such whaling activities;

Whereas Japan has already killed more than 500 whales in despite of these International Whaling Commission resolutions and has publicly declared its intention to take several hundred more whales during the current whaling season;

Whereas Japan was certified by the Secretary of Commerce in 1988 under the Packwood-Magnuson Amendment and the Pelly Amendment for its research whaling activities that diminished the effectiveness of the conservation program of the International Whaling Commission;

Whereas in 1988 Japan was denied permits to fish in the United States Exclusive Economic Zone as a result of this certification, but no additional action has been taken beyond denial of 1989 permits as a results of Japan's whaling activities which continued in 1989; and

Whereas other nations have also continued to kill whales for scientific research despite International Whaling Commission resolutions disapproving their research plans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) continued whaling and commercialization of whale meat represent a violation of the International Whaling Commission moratorium on commercial whaling;

(2) in accordance with United States statutes, the Secretary of Commerce should certify any nation for continued whaling activities that have been rejected as scientifically invalid by the International Whaling Commission;

(3) the President should use his authority under the Pelly Amendment, and other powers of his Office, to order an embargo on a significant quantity of fishery products entering the United States from nations found to be diminishing the effectiveness of the International Whaling Convention;

(4) the President should use all tools of diplomacy to convince whaling nations to comply with decisions of the International Whaling Commission; and

(5) the President should use all tools of diplomacy to encourage the support of the member nations of the International Whaling Commission for a long term solution to the problems before the Commission.

ISRAEL 42

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, it is a special privilege for me to rise today to honor Israel on its recent 42d birthday. In my congressional district, an event called Israel 42, is commemorating this joyous occasion this coming Sunday.

On May 13, the Greater Miami Jewish Federation in cooperation with Miami Dade Community College Mitchell Wolfson Campus, the Rabbinical Association of Greater Miami, the Miami Herald and the Metropolitan Dade County Cultural Affairs Council and Board of County Commissioners will have successfully organized a very festive Israeli celebration.

Israel's 42d anniversary is cause for galas all over the world and for individual communities to come together to honor the success of the Jewish state. Israel 42 is a family oriented gala designed to enhance the knowledge and understanding of the land, history, art, music and culture of the people of Israel.

It is this anniversary and every year that passes which is important to Jewish people all around the world. After years without a national homeland, the Jewish people finally established their own country in 1948 and the historic nation of Israel was reborn.

In special recognition, I commend David Smith, chairman of Israel 42 and Sam Dubbin, chairman of opening ceremonies, for putting forth toward a remarkable event, Israel 42.

CHAMORRO KEEPS SUPPORT FOR SALVADORAN REBELS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, like most Americans, I was extremely pleased by the stunning victory of Violeta Chamorro over Daniel Ortega in Nicaragua's February election. At the time, I delighted in thinking that democracy would soon flourish in the war torn country. With this in mind, I am sure you can understand how disturbed I was by an article in the Christian Science Monitor—reprinted below—which highlights a number of links between the Communist rebels in El Salvador and the newly elected Government in Nicaragua.

I am certain many of my colleagues were disturbed, as was I, when they learned that President Chamorro had decided to retain Gen. Humberto Ortega, brother of Daniel Ortega, as chief of the Army. Although it was generally understood at the time that Mrs. Chamorro made this decision in order to placate the Sandinistas, in light of her recent decision to allow the FMLM to keep offices open in Managua, as well as other revelations unveiled in this article, I am forced to question the level of Mrs. Chamorro's commitment to democracy.

While I am no less pleased over Mrs. Chamorro's defeat of Ortega, I do believe the United States must tread cautiously where the new Nicaraguan government is concerned. I urge my colleagues to please take a few minutes to read the following article:

CHAMORRO KEEPS SUPPORT FOR SALVADORAN REBELS

(By Brook Larmer)

In an apparent rebuff to the United States, the government of Violeta Barrios de Chamorro has agreed to let leftist rebels of neighboring El Salvador Keep offices open here for political activity, according to a leader of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front.

Salvador Samayoa, leading spokesman for the Marxist-inspired guerrilla coalition, says the decision came after a series of meetings between FMLM representatives and the two top advisers of Mrs. Chamorro's government, Antonio Lacayo, minister of the presidency, and Alfredo Cesar, ex-contra director.

"Our activity will be more discreet [than before] but it won't be secret," says Mr. Samayoa, noting that the Chamorro's government wants to play a role in resolving other civil wars in the region. "All the logistical and military support . . . that we were said to receive will not be acceptable even by the "softer" members of the new government. But we'll still be able to do political work."

For the past decade, the FMLN has turned its close relationship with the Sandinista comandantes into a logistical base that serves a variety of purposes: for rest and relaxation, for medical attention to wounded fighters, for high-level consultations, for transmissions of Radio Venceremos, for training with new weapons and artillery, and even—as the US has constantly charged—for arranging shipments of arms to El Salvador.

The US government, concerned with stopping Nicaraguan support for the FMLN, has justified supporting contras by saying they were preventing Nicaragua from exporting revolution.

With unusual frankness, Samayoa acknowledged that the FMLN often arranged arms shipments through Nicaragua. He even said the rebels, with Sandinista cooperation, arranged the mysterious planeload of SAM-7 anti-aircraft missiles that took off in Nicaragua and crashed in a Salvadoran field in November.

When the Sandinistas were routed in the February elections here, pundits pitied the FMLN. Its biggest supporter was yanked away at a crucial moment in El Salvador's 10-year-old civil war. The conservative new government of the National Opposition Union (UNO), no one doubted, would not tolerate their presence in the country.

But by allowing for continued FMLN presence, the Chamorro government has shown again it is more pragmatic than ideological—and more independent from the US than anticipated. Retaining Gen. Humberto Ortega as chief of the Army required similar pragmatism and independence.

But the concession to the FMLN is not all due to politics. As with many key decisions Chamorro has made, it has something to do with family ties.

Two of Mrs. Chamorro's children, Claudia and Carlos Fernando, have close contacts with the FMLN. A nephew, Federico Barrios, is married to a Salvadoran with FMLN sympathies.

Beyond that, about 40,000 Salvadoran refugees reside in Nicaragua, many of them managing the most successful farming cooperatives in the north. Of these refugees, Samayoa says, between 400 and 1,000 Salvadorans are involved in FMLN activities.

American officials are worried.

With Sandanista commander Humberto Ortega still in charge of the Army—and an FMLN office intact—they fear the Sandinistas may continue aiding the Salvadoran rebels. Samayoa laughs at that, saying the FMLN has "never gotten along particularly well" with Ortega, preferring to deal with the more ideological commander, Luis Carrion.

PRO-LIFE—THE HUMANITARIAN MOVEMENT OF OUR TIME

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend to my colleagues the following text of an excellent speech made by Vice President DAN QUAYLE at the recent "Rally for Life 1990." In his remarks, the Vice President reminds us that the pro life cause is "the humanitarian movement of our time." I sincerely hope that all of my colleagues will take a moment to read this very moving and thoughtful speech:

REMARKS BY VICE PRESIDENT DAN QUAYLE

Thank you. Your tremendous turnout today—in the hundreds of thousands—is a powerful demonstration of your commitment and caring.

This is a day of both celebration and protest—a day of great sadness overcome by an even greater hope. This day can begin a healing of the terrible wound which, for almost two decades, has torn at our country's heart.

I want to thank you for your sacrifice, your courage, and your faith in the enduring decency of this nation. You and the millions like you all over this land have stirred a renewal of the American spirit, an awakening of conscience and compassion after too many years of complacency and self-concern.

Today we confront a national tragedy: an infant can be aborted, for almost any reason, up to the time of its birth. The great majority of Americans, in poll after poll, object to that. They may disagree about how best to turn the situation around. But almost all stand together against the terrible reality of unlimited abortion on demand. That overwhelming majority constitutes the largest coalition—I might say, the biggest tent—in American politics.

Some endeavors are more important than partisanship, and surely more important than personal advancement. Protecting the least of our brethren is such a cause.

The pro-life movement is the humanitarian movement of our time. Some of those who defend the status quo accuse you of extremism. But their extremism cannot stand the light of honest discussion or the test of reasoned debate.

Will the American people continue to accept the notion that unborn children are disposable? Our answer is: Not in this country. Not now. Not ever.

Twenty years ago, abortion may have seemed the easy way out for a society reeling from the collapse of a moral consensus. Instead, it turned out to be a way to shift onto women and children the burdens of the sexual revolution. And along with it came a dramatic increase in other forms of mistreatment of children: abuse, abandonment, exploitation in pornography and prostitution.

Should we be surprised?

None of us, women or man, can presume to judge those faced with a problem pregnancy. But no one can be proud that, here in our nation's capital, abortions outnumber live births. No one can be comfortable with the way minority children, especially Black and Hispanic babies, are lost in greater proportion than others. And the loss of some 25 million children in total to abortion since 1973 has been unspeakable.

It is as if we were shooting out the stars, one by one, preparing for ourselves an unending night of the most fearful darkness. You have been voices against the night: Caring for women in need and children in danger, opening your homes to the homeless and fatherless, adopting and nurturing, you redeem your country's future by living the ideals of its past.

There are no easy victories in any great cause. They are won as much by patience and persistence as by numbers and skill. But this we may confidently say: the worst years are behind us. The conscience of our country is stirring.

When the human dimension of an issue is clearly presented to the American people, they will always, always choose justice for the weak and mercy for the helpless. That is our heritage, made richer by every generation of Americans who confronted their society's shortcomings, opened their hearts, and did what had to be done to set things right. Today we reaffirm that heritage.

In both justice and mercy, we can save those children, one by one by a million, until at last no one will be cast away. No one will be cut off from us. No one will be denied a place in our family.

IN TRIBUTE OF LT. COL. TODD BODENHAMER, OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE LIAISON, U.S. AIR FORCE

HON. WILLIAM L. DICKINSON

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Lt. Col. Todd A. Bodenhamer, office of the legislative liaison U.S. Air Force, who will be departing the Pentagon this month for a new assignment as a Minuteman II squadron commander at Malmstrom AFB, MT. A consummate professional, he has done a superb job during his 4 years in the Pentagon. Lieutenant Colonel Bodenhamer began his Pentagon tour in Air Force acquisition where he was one of a select group of officers charged with implementing the President's Intercontinental Ballistic Missile [ICBM] Modernization Program. In that capacity he oversaw the programming, budgeting and execution of three major weapon systems—Peacekeeper, the Small ICBM and Rail Garrison. After serving in Air Force acquistion for a year and a half, he was transferred to Air Force legislative liaison. There he has been responsible to the Secretary of the Air Force for liaison between the Air Force and Congress regarding the annual authorization of ICBM modernization programs totaling $2 billion.

A gentleman of Lieutenant Colonel Bodenhamer's talent and integrity is rare. While his presence in Air Force legislative liaison will be genuinely missed, it gives me great pleasure to recognize Lieutenant Colonel Bodenhamer before my colleagues and to wish him continued success as he assumes the prestigious position of an operational squadron commander. His wife Teresa and children Todd Jr. and Alissa will, as always, be at his side supporting him in the years ahead. Lieutenant Colonel Bodenhamer has done an outstanding job in Washington, DC, these last 4 years. He is now embarking on an entirely new endeavor—manning the front lines of deterrence. I wish him and his family Godspeed in the years ahead.

A TRIBUTE TO AILEEN LAURIE

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

This award is presented to the student, chosen by St. Mary Academy-Bay View, who demonstrates a mature blend of academic achievement, community involvement, and leadership qualities.

Aileen has clearly met these criteria by being a member of the National Honor Society for her junior and senior years. In addition, she is graduating in the top 10 percent of her class. Aileen has been a member of the student council for 3 years. Aileen also has been very active in her parish's CYO group.

SALUTING THE OXNARD PRESS-COURIER'S GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to commend and congratulate The Oxnard Press-Courier on a half century of service to the community. The Press-Courier was formed on May 6, 1940, when Oxnard's oldest paper, The Daily Courier, joined with the Oxnard Evening Press.

According to the lead editorial of the paper's first edition, "A new name in California journalism was born today, as two great newspapers became merged." And by combining the two names, "The old and the new are preserved for future generations of Oxnarders." Fifty years later, the Press-Courier has not only preserved its name, but also preserves the role of the hometown newspaper. It is a community newspaper in the grand tradition, never forgetting the importance of local news as written by local people.

Jerry Scott, the publisher of the Press-Courier and an Oxnard native has said, "everybody has just one goal—to produce the best newspaper we can." That goal has led to the paper's largest expansion ever, including the construction of a new $13 million press, a far cry from the 2 horsepower gasoline engine used by the Oxnard Courier back in 1899.

The new 175 ton offset press will be housed in the 3 story structure in the parking lot of the newspaper. It will dwarf the paper's present offices, with construction set to start in August. This expansion is the most recent and most ambitious that the Press-Courier has undertaken. And it just goes to show one of the secrets of the newspaper's success, to always keep up with and grow with the community you are reporting about.

From encouraging the planting of beets almost a century ago, to keeping up with the massive growth in the area after World War II, to today, this newspaper and its forebearers have always been there to provide vital and timely news and information for the people of Oxnard. I know my colleagues join me in saluting Publisher Jerry Scott, Editor Tom Roberts, Thompson Newspapers, and the entire staff of the Oxnard Press-Courier as a sterling example of America's free and vibrant press.

SALUTE TO IVAN AND EVA NELSON OF PASSAIC, NJ, FOR THEIR CONTRIBUTIONS TO CONGREGATION ADAS ISRAEL

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute two citizens of Passaic, NJ, in the heart of my eighth Congressional District, whose efforts on behalf of their congregation, Adas Israel Synagogue Center of Passaic have truly made their community, their State and our Nation a far better place to live.

I am speaking of Ivan and Eva Nelson, who will be honored for their innumerable contributions with a testimonial breakfast on Sunday, May 20, at the Adas Israel Synagogue Center in Passaic. I know this event will be a great success and be a tremendous source of pride, not only to Ivan and Eva Nelson and their family, but also to Adas Israel's great spiritual leader, Rabbi Dr. Solomon F. Rybak, and testimonial breakfast chairman, Dr. Harold Jawetz.

Mr. Speaker, as a means of providing the details of Ivan and Eva Nelson's considerable contributions to Adas Israel and to their community, I would like to insert for the RECORD the official history of their involvement in Adas Israel:

One October day in 1938, shortly after Rabbi Leon Katz took over his new post as spiritual leader of Congregation Adas Israel, there was a new arrival at the home of Max and Fannie Nelson in Passaic, a boy—Ivan—joined his three older sisters. Max Nelson would go on to become a pillar of the congregation, a Vice President and Gabbai at its original synagogue on Tulip Street for over two decades, until its closing in 1967. In the early 1950's, under Fannie Nelson's leadership, the small Parent-Teachers' Cultural Group of the Hebrew School blossomed into the Congregation's Sisterhood.

Ivan's involvement with Adas Israel goes back to just before his seventh birthday, when he entered its Hebrew School. His bar mitzvah took place at the Tulip Street schul. He graduated from its Hebrew School. During his high school and college years Ivan first assisted, and then took charge of, the synagogue's Junior Congregation.

Ivan attended the local public schools and then Cooper Union School of Engineering. He graduated in 1960 with a Bachelor of Civil Engineering degree. He received a three year National Defense Education Act fellowship to attend Columbia University. He earned both his MS ('61) and Doctor of Engineering Science ('65) degrees from Columbia.

The future Eva Nelson grew up in Pittsburgh, PA. She attended local schools there and then Stern College of Yeshiva University, from which she graduated in 1962. She subsequently ('67) received an MS from City University of New York. In 1985, after her children were grown, she returned to school and earned Certification in Learning Disabilities—Teacher/Consultant from Montclair State College.

Eva and Ivan were married by Rabbi Katz at Adas Israel on August 22, 1965. The couple took up residence in Arlington, Va., where Ivan was employed by the Institute for Defense Analyses, a Washington area "think tank". Eva taught in the Arlington public schools.

In 1966, the couple returned to the metropolitan area when Ivan started to work for Weidlinger Associates, a New York based consulting engineering firm. The Nelsons moved to an apartment in Forest Hills, NY. Eva returned to her former teaching job at PS 2 in lower Manhattan. In 1969, after three years in Forest Hills (and 1⅔ children), the Nelsons purchased their home in Passaic.

Almost immediately after returning to Passaic, Ivan was appointed to the Executive Board of the congregation. He has remained an active member ever since. He served as President of the congregation from 1971 to 1973, the youngest president in its history. He was Vice President of the Men's Club from '75 to '78. He was last year's Journal Chairman. Eva is a Life Member of the Sisterhood, where she has chaired the Paid Up Membership gathering for three years and been involved in numerous other projects. She served as Editor of the Congregation's Bulletin from 1971 to 1974.

Both Ivan and Eva have been active in Hillel Academy. Both have been (and Ivan remains) active members of the Hillel Board of Education ('73-'75). Eva subsequently filled the same position. Ivan first became a Vice President of Hillel in 1974. Eva served as Hillel Vice President from 1978 to 1981. Ivan served as President from 1982 to 1983; Eva as PTA President from 1976 to 1978. Eva is a former Editor of the Hillel News, a Life Member of the PTA and currently a member of the Hillel Board of Trustees.

Ivan and Eva have been and continue to be involved in the community. Eva is a Life Member of Hadassah, a member of Emunah Women, Daughters of Miriam Auxiliary and other organizations. Ivan has served as Secretary and Vice President of the Jewish Family Service. He continues to serve as an active member of its board. He has been a Delegate to the Jewish Memorial Chapel since 1980. He served on the Executive Committee of the Jewish Federation and was the first chairman of its task force on community revitalization. A few years ago, when the discovery of non-kosher meat at a local butcher shop led to the reorganization of the Vaad Hakohel, the local rabbis asked Ivan to lead that effort. He continues to serve as President of that organization today, a post his father, the late Max Nelson, held a generation earlier.

The Nelsons have been recognized previously for their efforts on behalf of the community. Ivan was honored by Yeshiva University in 1975. The couple were presented with the Tomchay Torah Award at the Hillel Academy Melava Malka in 1981. Ivan received the Hillel Adopt-a-Scholar Award in 1982; Eva in 1984.

Professionally, Ivan remains at Weidlinger Associates, where he is a Senior Associate in the Applied Science Division. In addition, he has served as an Adjunct Associate Professor of Civil Engineering at Columbia ('67-'74 and '77) and Adjunct Professor of Civil Engineering at Cooper Union ('81-'83). He is a Fellow of the American Society of Civil Engineers and a member of the American Academy of Mechanics and the Earthquake Engineering Research Institute and Sigma Xi, Tau Beta Pi and Chi Epsilon honorary societies. He is a licensed Professional Engineer in New York State.

Eva is a learning disabilities teacher/consultant and is currently employed as a resource room teacher in the Verona Public Schools. She previously worked as an LDTC in Verona and Parsippany.

The Nelsons are proud parents of three children. All graduated from Hillel Academy and the Frisch Yeshiva High School. Shalom, currently a senior at Rutgers University studying Mechanical/Aerospace Engineering, had spent a year at Yeshivat Kerem B' Yavneh in Israel. He is also a licensed pilot. Esther is a junior at Brandeis University majoring in biochemistry. Ariel is currently at Yeshivat HaMivtar in Israel. He plans to attend Columbia next year.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to present this brief profile of two people who cared enough about their friends and neighbors, their house of worship and their town to make a firm commitment to make their community, their State and our Nation a better place to live, Ivan and Eva Nelson of Congregation Adas Israel, Passaic, NJ.

TRIBUTE TO THE PURCHASING MANAGEMENT ASSOCIATION OF READING

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to pay tribute to the Purchasing Management Association of Reading. On Friday, June 1 the Purchasing Management Association of Reading will be holding its annual meeting, at which its newly elected officers, board of directors, and committee chairpersons will assume their duties. Also during this meeting, this past year's officers will be recognized for their efforts to further the association over the last 12 months.

The Purchasing Management Association of Reading is comprised of 137 dedicated men and women who daily fulfill purchasing and materials management tasks. Effective purchasing management is one of the linchpins to any organization's efficiency and success. Moreover, both the Purchasing Management Association of Reading, and the National Association of Purchasing Management, actively develop and promote the purchasing profession, and both work to advance and enforce a business code of ethics.

Mr. Speaker, the Purchasing Management Association of Reading is intimately involved in fostering national and international leadership in purchasing and materials management. For their efforts, direct and indirect, to make all of our lives easier, it is only fitting that we acknowledge those in the purchasing profession. I am certain that my colleagues here in the House of Representatives join me in wishing the incoming officers, board of directors, and committee chairpersons of the Purchasing Management Association of Reading the best of luck and success in the coming year.

SAVE GRAMM-RUDMAN

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, once again Congress is undertaking the difficult task of developing a budget—that is, developing a budget proposal that fits within the constraints mandated by Gramm-Rudman. Since it has become law, Gramm-Rudman, has been the object of a great deal of criticism and yes, it does have its shortcomings. Nonetheless, it is the only discipline that Congress has to maintain some sense of fiscal responsibility. This body cannot, in good conscience, retract Gramm-Rudman—such action would only result in continued and increased careless spending. I commend to my colleagues an editorial from the April 17, 1990, edition of the Arizona Republic, in hopes that it will enlighten those who favor repeal of Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law:

TAXPAYERS' BEST FRIEND—SAVE GRAMM-RUDMAN

Few in Washington are talking openly about it, and with good reason. With millions of Americans having just paid their tax bills, even the least savvy politician knows that this is not the right moment to mention the government's budget mess.

Though the legal deadline for congressional approval of next year's Federal budget is a week away, no action appears on the calendar. Even the big spenders who chant the "everybody-knows-a-tax-increase-is-necessary" mantra are keeping mum.

That's because American taxpayers know instinctively that they are paying enough to run the government. Few outside Washington would agree that more money is what is needed for such nonsense as paying farmers not to plant crops or bankrolling corrupt governments in backwater countries on distance continents. Some might even be shocked to learn that nearly 18 percent of their tax bill goes to pay the interest on the federal debt.

It is clear that when it comes to fiscal policy, Washington does not have one. Even after 10 years of supposedly conservative Republican administrations, the only brake on runaway spending is the flawed Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction law, which itself has been abused by an assortment of accounting gimmicks and numerological hocus-pocus.

Though nobody is talking about it, this year could be different. The worst kept secret in Washington is that the Democratic leadership in Congress, fearing that the bag of budget tricks is at last empty, has decided to jettison Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

The worry, and a real one at that, is that if the democrats cannot come up with a budget to meet the $64 billion deficit ceiling required this year by G-R-H, the White House will let the automatic enforcement provision of the act kick in. Called "sequestration," the process would impose equal cuts in defense and non-defense spending in order to reach the deficit reduction target.

Because Pentagon outlays are likely to be pared substantially anyway, President Bush has little to lose if he were to hold out for sequestration. Whether he will, however, is unclear. Despite his "read my lips" campaign promise, rumors are rife that Mr. Bush is ready to deal. To get his capital-gains tax reduction through Congress, Mr. Bush might be prepared to accept an increase in the federal gasoline tax or the top marginal rate for income.

Few would argue that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, in concept or in practice, has been a model of perfection. Far from it. But America's battered taxpayers, woefully short of friends in Washington, could ill afford to lose this one.

A TRIBUTE TO MEAGAN WARD

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to congratulate Meagan Ward, of Providence, RI, this year's recipient of the Congressman RONALD K. MACHTLEY Academic and Leadership Excellence Award for Mount Pleasant High School, in Providence, RI.

This award is presented to the student, chosen by Mount Pleasant High School, who demonstrates a mature blend of academic achievement, community involvement, and leadership qualities.

Meagan has clearly met these criteria by being a member of the student council for the 10th grade and a member of the executive board for her senior year. She was a member of the school's social committee for her sophomore and junior years. Meagan has also participated in the Academic Decathlon for her junior and senior years. She is a member of Mount Pleasant for Peace, the New Directions Anti-Drug Program, and tutors in special education at Birch Vocational.

I commend Meagan for her outstanding achievements and wish her all the best in her future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO MAJ. GEN. BURTON R. MOORE, DIRECTOR, AIR FORCE LEGISLATIVE LIAISON

HON. WILLIAM L. DICKINSON

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, over the last 4 years, Congress and the Air Force have worked better together due to the efforts of one man. Therefore, I want to take this opportunity at the end of his tour to thank Maj. Gen. Burton R. Moore for his effective, dedicated, and distinguished service as Director of Air Force Legislative Liaison.

Burt Moore succeeded in Washington because he excelled at getting timely information to Congress on a wide range of Air Force issues. At a time when congressional requests for information to all the services have been growing geometrically, Burt has never failed to meet the demand with skill and aplomb.

That ability has paid dividends. The House Armed Services Committee was better able to assess the critical defense needs of the Nation, whether those needs were major weapons systems, quality of life programs for service men and women, or military construction projects because of General Moore's dedication. Moreover, Burt's efforts ensured that Congress had a clear understanding of Air Force missions, roles, and requirements. He has been the committee's trusted bridge to the Air Force.

Always professional, always diligent, Major General Moore used his indepth knowledge of the Congress to improve the quality of everything from Air Force weapons systems to personnel.

It has been a pleasure to work with Burt Moore. His contributions to the defense of our country have been significant. As he leaves for his next assignment as the Director of Operations for U.S. Central Command, on behalf of the House Armed Services Committee I wish him farewell and continued success.

ANTI-SEMITISM IN THE SOVIET UNION

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, with the decline of communism there is another specter haunting Europe, and that is the specter of ultranationalism. This threat manifests itself in many equally fearsome forms, and I would like to draw attention to one of those forms—anti-Semitism.

Racial hatred is born of ignorance. Anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union, as anywhere else, is the product of ignorance, plain and simple. The totalitarian system imposed on the Russian people for most of this century froze them in history. Thus, while the advance of history saw the spread of the enlightened ideals of racial toleration throughout much of the rest of the world, such ideals could not reach the isolated and oppressed people of Russia.

In 1990 then, we hear that there are people in Russia whose words and actions betray a mindset of the last century. They spread vicious lies about the nature of Judaism and about the Jewish people. They conveniently scapegoat the Jewish people for all the problems of contemporary Soviet society. They create an environment of fear for Jews through cruel acts of intimidation. And we fear that the situation will get only worse.

Recently I had the opportunity to travel to Israel and to meet Jewish emigres from the Soviet Union as they arrived. There I heard, firsthand, tales of the intimidation and fear that is a part of the daily lives of so many Soviet Jews today.

As Members of the United States Congress, we have the power to draw attention to the problem of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union. We can shine the light of reason on those who remain in the dark of ignorance. We must also let the soviet leadership know that the behavior of anti-Semitic extremists must not receive sanction of the state. Mr. Gorbachev, whose leadership has brought the Russian people out of the depths of dictatorship, must be urged to acknowledge the problem of anti-Semitism and to take a strong public stand against it.

We must also keep up the pressure on the Soviet leadership to continue to allow the emigration of Soviet Jews who wish to leave the intimidation that they face in the Soviet Union. To this end my distinguished colleagues, Mr. KOSTMAYER and Mr. MILLER, are leading the congressional call to conscience vigil for Soviet Jews. This campaign will draw attention to the problem of increasing anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union as well as to the need for the continuation of such pressure. I do hope that many more Members of Congress will join us in this vital effort.

TRIBUTE TO DORIS WESTFALL

HON. TERRY L. BRUCE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Mrs. Doris Westfall who has been selected to receive a 1990 Chevron Citizen Volunteer Conservation Award.

Mrs. Westfall is a retired registered nurse who learned to love nature and care for the environment growing up on a farm in Champaign County, IL. Mrs. Westfall was a member of the original committee which formed the Vermilion County Conservation District and is currently serving her third term as president of the Vermilion County Audubon Society.

In here capacity as an Audubon leader, Mrs. Westfall has spent hundreds of hours helping to lead the battle to save Illinois' Kickapoo State Park from strip mining. As a direct result of her efforts, no mining has taken place in the park.

Mrs. Westfall is also an "Acorn" member of the nature conservancy. When the Boy Scouts of America decided to sell their camp at Portland Arch, IN, she alerted the Indiana Nature Consevancy to the striking geological features and historical significance of the preserve. As project chairwoman she raised the funds necessary to save this area as a prized component of the Indiana Nature Preserve System.

Whether advocating conservation and preservation of natural areas before civic groups, speaking to conferences on prairie restoration, serving as a volunteer guide in Vermilion County parks, or working with young people as a camp leader, Mrs. Westfall has distinguished herself and helped to perpetuate the ideal that individuals do make a difference.

It is with great admiration that I congratulate Mrs. Westfall on her slection to receive a bronze medallion designating her as a Chevron award winner. Characteristically, she is donating the $1,000 honorarium which accompanies this award to one of her pet projects, the ongoing restoration of the 40-acre Forest Glen Prairie Preserve which supports more than 100 grasses and flowers native to the prairie.

I wish her much success as she continues her work of the last 30 years preserving, restoring, and inspiring the ideals of love of nature and care for the environment.

A TRIBUTE TO CHARLES E. MOTTINGER

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Eagle Scout Charles E. Mottinger. Charles earned the rank of Eagle Scout while he was a member of Troop 1 in Middletown, RI.

The process of becoming an Eagle Scout is a hardship which tests the fiber of the young men who take the challenge. Charles' perseverance and accomplishment lift him above the ordinary. Charles has displayed the courage, discipline, and leadership which forms the backbone of our Nation.

I wish to offer my congratulations to Charles and hope that he will continue to strive toward the goals he has established as a Boy Scout.

CONGRATULATIONS FATHER EDWARD CONNELLY ON HIS 25TH ORDINATION

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Father Edward Connelly on his 25th ordination. Father Connelly is the previous associate pastor of St. Pius X parish and taught at St. Mary's Seminary in Baltimore. He is currently the pastor of my church, St. Elizabeth Ann Seton, where he has accomplished much during the past 3 years.

One of Father Connelly's main concerns has been in laying the groundwork for a new parish center. This new center will be the focus of a variety of education and youth activities for children in the area, and serve as a location of various religious meetings.

I would also like to add that it has been a pleasure to attend Father Connelly's parish. Father Connelly is concerned, friendly, and warm-hearted. I hope that my colleagues will join me in congratulating Father Connelly on his 25th ordination.

PRINCE ANDREJ KARADJORDJEVIC

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, Prince Andrej Karadjordjevic of Yugoslavia, youngest son of King Aleksandar I and Queen Marija, died Monday May 7, 1990, in Palm Springs. The Royal House of Karadjordjevic had ruled Serbia and Yugoslavia during the 19th and 20th centuries until the Communists' rise to power destroyed democracy in their homeland.

Serbs mourn the death of their prince who was an unquestionable voice for Serbian unity. In addition, I mourn the loss of a friend and respected compatriot in the never-ending battle for freedom.

Prince Andrej's physical appearance was that of a true Karadjordjevic: tall, dark and with distinctive features. Quiet, modest, and gentle, with his dignified bearing he won the hearts of everyone with whom he came into contact.

The Prince spoke Serbian and English fluently and was an extraordinary conversationalist. He was direct and honest and to all questions gave true and concise answers. Yet, he knew how to listen. His bearing reflected an Oxford scholar. The thorough education he gained at that famous institution provided an excellent foundation upon which he built a decent existence.

He was an open person with a sunny disposition.

Prince Andrej had an infinite love for his Serbian people. He was deeply unhappy about their misfortunes and never-ending suffering. The freedom-loving Serbs, who are historical allies of the United States, gave their lives in many wars to protect that freedom and democracy. Yet, in recent decades, they were struck down by their own government.

With his devoted Serbian wife Princess Eva Marie, Prince Andrej played an intricate role not only in the lives of Serbs in America, but in the lives of Serbs in all the free world. He had no aspirations for leadership nor did he desire some fleeting and treacherous glory. He loved all Serbs and well did he know their good and bad sides.

The Prince traveled throughout the world. His presence helped Serbian emigrants strengthen their beliefs in their culture and heritage.

On June 28, which Serbs venerate as Battle of Kosovo Day, The Prince would have been 61 years old. Is it not fate that the man who struggled to maintain the Sebian tradition was born on the very day of a great battle Serbs fought 600 years ago against the Ottoman Empire? It was in Kosovo, their heartland, the cradle of their culture, where Serbs sacrificed so many of their lives in order to protect their freedom and Christianity.

Today, Serbs in Yugoslavia face the challenge of restoring democracy to their country once again. With the death of the Prince, Serbs have lost a part of the history which they have for a millenium struggled to maintain. But they will keep his memory alive and follow his path of nurturing the Serbian tradition and continuing to fight for Serbian unity.

TRIBUTE TO THE "WOMEN OF ACHIEVEMENT" IN ST. LOUIS

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, for the past 25 years, the St. Louis media has found a unique way to honor some of St. Louis' most distinguished citizens. The suburban journals and KMOX radio have again sponsored this program to honor women in the St. Louis area who make extraordinary contributions within the community. I rise today in tribute to St. Louis' "Women of Achievement for 1990," Ms. Ailene Auner, Ms. Helen Delicate, Ms. Johann Ellerbrake, Ms. Virginia Pierce Stith, Ms. Dorothy St. Clair, Dr. Joyce Thomas, and particularly the honorees from my district, Ms. Dudley Grove, Ms. Judy Crowell, Ms. Joy Rice Dunkelman, and Sister Raymond Joseph Cordes.

Undoubtedly we all have, at one time or another, given our time or money to some charitable cause and taken some satisfaction in the good that we have accomplished. However, on Wednesday, May 16 all of St. Louis will recognize 10 women for whom charity and good works are a way of life.

Judy Crowell of Town and Country, MO, has spent the last 4 years combating the growing problem of teen suicide through a program called Kids Under 21. Four years ago, the suicide of her own son brought Judy's attention to this ever-growing national problem, and today we see that her personal tragedy has become the salvation for the many young men and women who might have taken their own lives; thus she has also given a brighter future to their families who would have had to endure the questions which each of these deaths would undoubtedly wrench forth.

While Judy Crowell has worked for the betterment of the young members of society, Ms. Joy Rice Dunkelman of Ladue has dedicated herself to the well-being of those in their twilight years. While her accomplishments and contributions are many, perhaps most notable has been her role in establishing the St. Louis Senior Olympics; this program brings to senior citizens the joy of competition and the physical well-being that comes with it. Every St. Louisian has seen at least one of these smiling, mature olympians talk about the joy of competition in juxtaposition to the agony of sitting alone, watching time crawl by. Ms. Dunkelman has also worked long and closely with the Jewish Hospital Board and the American Cancer Society.

Another resident of Ladue, MO, who will be recognized is Ms. Dudley Grove who seems to have a hand in virtually every community program in St. Louis, serving the old, young, sick, and impoverished on a daily basis. Her public service resume includes such organizations as the American Red Cross, the Urban League, and the United Way, in addition to her leadership roles with the St. Louis Junior League for the past 15 years. Dudley has given of herself in education, in the arts, and yes, even in politics.

The last constituent of mine who will be recognized is Sister Raymond Joseph Cordes of St. Joseph's Academy in St. Louis. Aside from being affiliated with a school that is known for producing outstanding young women, the clientele for Sister Cordes' altruism includes former prostitutes, the illiterate, and crippled children, working to educate each group to become the best people they can be. Her 48 years as a member of the sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet have been years dedicated to God, church, community, and family; indeed, she is a star for each of us to follow.

Mr. Speaker, I would further like to congratulate the St. Louis suburban journals and KMOX radio in St. Louis for bringing the accomplishments of all 10 women of achievement to the attention of so many people who may learn from their example. For 25 years this program has shown us these ladies who have done so much to make St. Louis a better place.

Mr. Speaker, I ask this assembly to join me in saluting my constituents, Judy Crowell, Joy Rice Dunkelman, Dudley Grove, and Sister Raymond Joseph Cordes, as well as the other women of achievement, Ms. Ailene Auner, Ms. Helen Delicate, Ms. Johann Ellerbrake, Ms. Virginia Pierce Smith, Ms. Dorothy St. Clair, and Dr. Joyce Thomas. While their recognition as women of achievement is a great honor indeed, it is small when compared to their contributions. The real tribute they will receive will be reflected in the many lives they have touched and will continue to touch, as well as the gratitude of a community which is very much in their debt.

NORTH BEACH ELEMENTARY IS A BLUE RIBBON SCHOOL

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to announce to my fellow colleagues that North Beach Elementary School of Miami Beach, FL, has been selected for national recognition by the Blue Ribbon Schools Program of the U.S. Department of Education.

The purpose of the Blue Ribbon Schools Program, a national school improvement strategy, is to identify and call attention to unusually successful public and private elementary and secondary schools and, through publicity and other means, to encourage their emulation by other educators. Schools selected for national recognition represent the finest in American education.

Schools are judged on a number of research-based criteria: visionary leadership; a sense of shared purpose among faculty, students, parents, and the community; a climate conducive to effective teaching and teacher growth and recognition; an environment that conveys that all students can learn and that provides programs to challenge gifted, average, and at-risk students; evidence of impressive academic achievement and responsible behavior on the part of students; a high degree of involvement of parents and the broader community in school affairs; and, a "can-do" attitude toward problem solving.

Mr. Speaker, during my first 6 months in Congress, I have had the pleasure of visiting over 30 schools in my district. I had the pleasure of visiting with North Beach Elementary and witnessed the excellence for which they are now being recognized.

I would like to convey my congratulations and pride for a job well done to the students, faculty, and staff, and to Dr. Michael Kesselman, North Beach Elementary's principal, as well as Dan Snowberger, PTA president at North Beach Elementary. The outstanding work being done by everyone at North Beach Elementary deserves this recognition.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the wonderful students, staff, and parents of North Beach Elementary School for striving to maintain the highest standards, looking after the smallest detail, and going the extra mile. Excellence means caring—it means a special effort to do more. North Beach Elementary School has clearly set an example in excellence in education for all of us to follow.

TRIBUTE TO CLARK W. BULLARD

HON. TERRY L. BRUCE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Mr. Clark W. Bullard who has been selected to receive a 1990 Chevron Citizen Volunteer Conservation Award.

Mr. Bullard is an associate professor of mechanical engineering at the University of Illinois. He is also director of the Air Conditioning and Refrigeration Center which is developing new technologies that use ozone safe refrigerants, and chairman of the Central Midwest Radioactive Waste Commission.

He is receiving the Chevron Award for his successful 20-year effort to protect the Middle Fork of the Vermilion River. In 1989, Mr. Bullard's volunteer lobbying efforts as director of the committee on the Middle Fork of the Vermilion River involving 100,000 citizen volunteers paid off when the U.S. Interior Department designated the Middle Fork as part of the Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

Mr. Bullard's unwavering efforts in this campaign are evidence of his personal commitment to solving conservation challenges through imagination, cooperation, and plain hard work. On occasion he has even spent his 2 weeks' vacation haunting the State capitol corridors organizing grass roots lobbying efforts on scenic rivers, utility reform, or low level radioactive waste compacts.

He has shown extraordinary ability to blend his profesisonal expertise with a sensitivity to citizens' environmental concerns. His professional success is often attributed to the experience he has gained over the last 20 years organizing grassroots environmental groups. From these diverse groups, he has learned to deal with important and sensitive policy issues, and to analyze them from opposing perspectives, thereby enabling him to cooperate with these groups to reach workable compromises.

It is with great admiration that I congratulate Mr. Bullard on his selection to receive a bronze medallion designating him as a Chevron Award Winner. Characteristically, he is donating his $1,000 honorarium to the Central States Education Center which he calls the "best grassroots effort" for conservation in east-central Illinois.

I wish him much success as he continues his work of the last 20 years preserving and restoring our natural resources.

A TRIBUTE TO WAYNE NEWSOM

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to congratulate Wayne Newsom, of Providence, RI, this year's recipient of the Congressman Ronald K. Machtley Academic and Leadership Excellence Award for Hope High School, in Providence, RI.

This award is presented to the student, chosen by Hope High School, who demonstrates a mature blend of academic achievement, community involvement, and leadership qualities.

Wayne has clearly met these criteria during his time at Hope High School. Wayne has been selected to the Rhode Island Honor Society. He also received the Harvard Book Award during his junior year. In addition, Wayne is the senior class vice president. He has also earned all-State honors in cross country and indoor and outdoor track.

I commend Wayne for his outstanding achievements and wish him all the best in his future endeavors.

SHARKS AND THE FREE MARKET ECONOMY

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share with my colleagues this statement prepared by my friend and constituent, Lee B. Thomas, Jr., concerning an issue which is today before the Congress and its two judiciary panels: the effect on the economy, the workers, the shareholders and the communities of takeovers, buyouts, mergers and the various other forms of business realignment.

Since Lee is a serious student of business, as well as a highly successful practitioner, he is well-credentialed to analyze these business transactions.

Another credential Lee has is that Vermont-American, his family corporation, was itself taken over recently. So, his observations, conclusions and recommendations to the Congress carry added weight.

SHARKS AND THE FREE MARKET ECONOMY

(By Lee B. Thomas, Jr.)

PREFACE

I am greatly concerned over what corporate takeovers are doing to our society. I confess to a bias. I was the Chairman of the Board of Vermont American Corporation, a company that was taken over. We had a great company. We were the world class manufacturer of power tool accessories. I got a lot of money, but I no longer have the satisfaction of accomplishment.

DO SHARKS FEED ON BAD MANAGEMENT?

There are certain characteristics that take over specialists look for in determining whether or not to go after a company. There is no correlation between these characteristics and bad management. For instance:

1. A national brand with consumer recognition is a desirable asset. This is created by good marketing management.

2. A low debt to equity ration is desirable so that the acquired company can borrow to help the acquirer pay for the acquisition. I believe that a conservative balance sheet is usually good management as it keeps options open. Investment opportunities can be exercised and on the other hand adversity can be weathered if you are not deeply in debt.

3. A low price to earnings ratio is coveted by raiders. This can happen because the stock market has no confidence in the management because of poor past performance. On the other hand it can be because a good management insists on operating for long term rather than short term objectives.

4. Undervalued assets will attract sharks quicker than spilled blood. On the other hand a competent management will write off assets a rapidly as allowed for good tax planning.

I am not saying that badly run companies are never taken over. I just do not believe that there is any correlation between the quality of managements and the success of the sharks.

I am aware of a company that has done a lousy job for its shareholders. In an effort to become unattractive they incurred an enormous debt to make a huge acquisition. I think they paid too much. They also sold a growing division to a shark for the stock in their own company that the shark had bought. The shark said they got a bargain. That is how to stay independent if you have the stomach for it.

DO SHARKS MAXIMIZE SHAREHOLDER VALUE?

There seems to be a widely believed myth that a take over at a premium over the market price of shares is a great thing for the independent shareholders. This may or may not be the case. First we must remember that the acquirer is not Santa Claus. His motive is not to do great things for anyone but himself. He may believe that the company is worth more broken up and sold in pieces than it is as a single entity. He may wish to establish himself in a control position to milk the company for his private gain. He may think he is a better manager than the incumbent. In any event, enough shares to achieve control of a business are always worth a premium over the market value of 100 shares. 30 percent is not an uncommon premium. Invest in 100 shares, get taken over and enjoy the premium. Invest the proceeds in another company and get taken over again and again. It reminds me of the old fashioned chain letter. In the long run the organizers of the chain and the sharks are the only winners.

The value that the "Street" puts on a company's stock is based on a very short term projection of worth. The higher that interest rates are at a given time, the shorter this time frame must be and the more the "Street" value must be based on the current price earnings ratio. This is determine by the availability of high yield, low risk investment alternatives. A sensible individual investor should be interested in long term appreciation in value and in the increase in dividend for long term yield. Unfortunately Money Managers handling the billions of dollars in pension funds are seldom able to take a long range view. Money management is most competitive. Short term performance is the way these people are evaluated. Accepting the take over premium can make the quarter. This spectacular one time profit can bring in millions of dollars of new funds to manage. Never mind the long term.

PARANOIA

When a company is taken over in a hostile manner, it is inevitable that many lose their jobs. No new management will tolerate disloyalty. Those loyal to the old management are suspect. There is no need to duplicate staff functions. The new larger entity needs only one corporate lawyer, benefits manager, treasurer etc. No wonder the fear when the raider calls.

Unfortunately the paranoia causes some very bad things to happen. First, the management gets side tracked from its central purpose of running a good business. Defenses need to be considered. Expensive lawyers are hired. Investment bankers are hired and they are expensive in the extreme. Many times the old management resorts to a leveraged buy out. In a leveraged buy out, a huge amount of money is borrowed to either buy out the shark at his price ("green Mail"), or perhaps all the shareholders except the insiders are bought out and the company becomes a private company rather than one publicly owned. In these cases the value of the company frequently gets bid up to a very high price. The excessive debt can cause an eventual bankruptcy as in the case of Belknap Hardware. In this instance all employees lost their jobs and losses to suppliers of merchandise to Belknap ran to tens of millions of dollars.

I am not sure you can expect anything else from people who see their jobs threatened, and worse, see the jobs of the people who helped them build a business threatened. At least the top people usually have enough resources to avoid financial disaster. The second level can really suffer.

ARE UNFRIENDLY TAKEOVERS GOOD?

Individual cases may exist where society has benefited from a take over. On balance, I believe the evidence is conclusive that the present take over mania is dangerous to our basic economic system.

By definition, a take over results in a larger company without the successful expansion of markets or product from within. Size does not contribute to efficiency. The capital investment required to produce automobiles requires a large company, but in most industries the really spectacular growth rates are experienced by small and middle sized entrepreneurial companies. An entrepreneur would be crazy to go public today unless he doesn't care about his people and is motivated by short term greed. Intelligence says "do not tap public capital markets but be content to grow a little slower with internally generated funds without endangering the future." Society is not well served.

Now if you can create a monopolistic position with a merger, this might be of real benefit to the new shareholders. Not too good for the consumer and for society, but not bad for the shark. There has been a reluctance to enforce the antitrust laws in recent years.

Frequently a merger must be paid for by quickly selling off divisions that "do not fit" and liquidating plants. Disruptive and tough on workers and communities.

When I first went into the tool business, the best source for steel was Sharon Steel with a substantial ownership in the Roemer family. It was extremely well run. It was one of the early, successful examples of participatory management. Vic Posner was one of the first raiders. He got it. Pricing became chaotic. Deliveries became irregular. The company was leveraged to raid other companies. We scambled to find other sources. None are as satisfactory as Sharon was in its hay day. Sharon is now in Chapter 11.

You should hear Lee Iacocca talk about Goodyear.

The final argument rests on the billions of dollars spent in acquiring companies and on leveraged buy outs rather than spent for new equipment, research and development projects and other efforts to provide society with useful products at an ever more attractive price. Mergers and Acquisitions magazine estimated the tab at some $175 billion. How many state of the art factories would that buy?

IMPACT ON LOCAL COMMUNITIES

We have already mentioned the possible loss of jobs. Other detriments to the quality of life in a community result when a company is taken over. Louisville used to be headquarters for American Air Filter, National Industries, Brown and Williamson, The L & N Railroad, and Kentucky Fried Chicken to name a few. National management meetings made for air passengers. No passengers, no service. At the last count I heard about, there were only 22 publicly owned companies left in Louisville.

Who donates to the fund drives for Bellarmine College, the United Way, the Orchestra, etc? Public companies. Who supports the housing market? Business executives working for growing public companies sure help.

Most local companies use local banks, local investment bankers and local insurance companies.

A MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE

The Newell Company was able to go to a federal judge and get an injunction on the Vermont American buy back program on the basis that I was engaged in a fraudulent misappropriation of corporate funds for my personal benefit (entrenchment). Now we were helpless. We found another buyer who would at least pay a fair price and, we hoped, be better for the other constituencies. In the trial, I was found innocent, but the company was already gone.

SOME SUGGESTIONS

1. Remove the interest on corporate debt used for takeovers as a tax deduction.

2. Provide for generous termination benefits for all employees displaced or demoted for 3 years after a change in control of a company. This should be between one and three years of average pay depending on years of service.

3. It should be a felony to remove funds from or reduce the contribution percentage of payroll to a pension plan for 5 years after a change of control.

4. Strengthen the legal defenses for companies wishing to stay independent. Limit the use of injunctions. Protect the share holder rights plans (poison pills). This will be an important area since company buy back programs will be more expensive.

TRIBUTE TO PORTUGUESE CITIZENS

HON. DANIEL K. AKAKA

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Portuguese pioneers who migrated to the Kingdom of Hawaii over 200 years ago. Attracted by the beauty and opportunity they encountered in the islands, large numbers of Portuguese seamen and adventurers decided to settle in Hawaii.

While the major influx of Portuguese families arrived as contract plantation laborers almost 100 years later, these intrepid men made an early mark upon the culture, economy, and politics of the kingdom. Dr. Joao d'Castro, one of these early arrivals, served as secretary and adviser to Kamehameha the Great. The first settlers were rapidly assimilated as productive and valued citizens of Hawaii. They married women of differing ethnic and cultural backgrounds, beginning the harmonious ethnic and cultural melting pot that distinguishes Hawaii today.

Known for the industry, thrift and friendly nature, the first Portuguese are perhaps most renown for their skills as cowboys on the huge cattle ranches on the big island, Maui, Molokai, and Kauai. These cowboys, paniolos as we call them in Hawaii, displayed tremendous equestrian skills. Of equal cultural significance, they introduced the ukulele into Hawaiian culture. Indeed, the rich heritage of the Portuguese blended well into the diverse Hawaiian tapestry.

It is also appropriate that as we commemorate the bicentennial of the arrival of the Portuguese in Hawaii, and prepare to celebrate the 500th anniversary of the voyage of Christopher Columbus, we pause to appreciate the vision and bravery of the Portuguese explorers who were the teachers and leaders who made that first age of discovery possible.

Mr. Speaker, I join the city council of the city and county of Honolulu in congratulating citizens of Portuguese ancestry in Hawaii for their rich and numerous contributions to our island way of life and wish them great success as we all celebrate the bicentennial of the Portuguese in Hawaii.

COMMEMORATING THE BICENTENARY OF THE PORTUGUESE IN HAWAII

Whereas, the first Portuguese arrived in Hawaii in 1788, establishing a Portuguese community with immigrants from the Portuguese mainland, Macau, Goa, Timor and other Portuguese communities; and

Whereas, most of the Portuguese arriving in Hawaii quickly put aside their language and culture of the old country and sought rapid assimilation as citizens of Hawaii, becoming so thoroughly a part of Hawaii's mainstream that it was not until 1978, upon the celebration of the centennial of the major immigration that the Portuguese community rediscovered their distinct and rich heritage; and

Whereas, the Portuguese have introduced their blend of industriousness, thrift, good nature, loyalty, humor, sharing and caring, music and dance, the ukulele, and succulent foods; and

Whereas, the contributions of the Portuguese to the socio-economic well-being of Hawaii has been significant and lasting by the involvements of Dr. Joao d'Castro, Secretary and Advisor to King Kamehameha I (1814), Sgt. Leroy A. Mendonca, youngest solider to receive the Medal of Honor (1951); Antonio J. Perry, Chief Justice of the Territorial Supreme Court (1926); Bishop Stephen Alencastre (1926); and public servants, legislators, engineers, entrepreneurs, physicians, lawyers and judges, artists, and clergy; and

Whereas, the Bicentenary is being commemorated contemporaneously with the quintenary 12-year celebration of the great discoveries and glorious accomplishments of Portugal commencing in 1488 when Bartolomeu Dias rounded the Cape of Good Hope and entered the Indian Ocean, effecting what is perhaps the greatest single feat of navigation in history; and into the twentieth century with Coutinho and Cabral, the first trans-Atlantic aviators who completed their flight in 1922, five years before Lindberg's solo flight; and

Whereas, these discoveries were made possible through the vision and tenacity of Prince Henry, "The Navigator,"; and

Whereas, Christopher Columbus and other notable non-Portuguese navigators studied the art of navigation from the Portuguese, making their navigational feats possible; now, therefore be it

Resolved, That this Bicentenary celebration is an appropriate time to reflect upon and appreciate the exploits of the intrepid Portuguese navigators who braved uncharted oceans to discover two-thirds of this planet, as well as those who migrated to Hawaii over two hundred years ago to an unknown land; and be it finally

Resolved, That the Council of the City and County of Honolulu congratulates the citizens of Portuguese ancestry in Hawaii for their continued enrichment and sharing of their culture and wishes them much success in the celebration of the Bicentenary of the arrival of the Portuguese in Hawaii.

INTRODUCING THE RURAL SMALL BUSINESS ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1990

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to send a spark of hope to those who live in small rural towns and communities across America. The Rural Small Business Enhancement Act of 1990, which I am pleased to introduce today, unveils a major new Federal strategy to attack the problems which plague rural citizens. Over the last 150 years, this Nation has tried to ensure the economic well-being of rural areas by assisting and promoting the development of a strong agricultural economy. This commitment has allowed our Nation to feed many of the world's hungry and provide employment for many of our citizens. However, as more countries have undertaken the responsibility of feeding their own people, and as technological advances have required fewer people to be employed in farming, agriculture has declined as rural America's chief employers. Today, only 2 percent of our population is employed in farming and only slightly over 500 of the Nation's 2,097 rural counties are considered farming-dependent. A recent survey found that over 60 percent of all farm families currently receive some income from off-farm employment. Despite the contraction of the farm economy, agriculture remains an integral component of the rural economy. It must, therefore, continue to be vigorously supported and aggressively promoted.

The Federal Government has been slow in responding to changes in the rural economy and adapting its policies to accommodate these new realities. If the rural economy is to remain viable, greater emphasis must be placed on its diversification and increased Federal resources must be committed to the achievement of this aim. One obstacle to this effort is that nearly all Federal programs intended to spur the creation and growth of nonagricultural businesses are targeted at large towns and cities. This has allowed the urban economy to grow and prosper while rural areas continue to lag behind. One need only look to the recent past for proof of this occurrence. The achievements of the U.S. economy in the 1980's have been impressive. In this decade, America had enjoyed its greatest expansion in the postwar era. Unemployment rates have fallen to levels which many economists thought had faded with the passage of the 1950's. Since 1981, the United States has produced over 17.8 million new jobs, 92 percent of which have been in urban areas. Today, the Nation is enjoying over 60 months of continued, unprecedented economic growth, and more Americans are working now than at any other time in our history.

Unfortunately, this stunning growth has not found its way to all areas of America. Too often, right across the street, or county, or State, economic hardship and struggle continue unabated. Only slightly over 8 percent of the 17.8 million new jobs created in this decade have been in rural areas. And, while unemployment hovers around 5 percent nationally, half of the rural counties in America are experiencing unemployment of 10 percent or higher. Considering these facts, it is not difficult to understand why nearly 500,000 rural citizens each year take their hopes and dreams, as well as their talents, to urban areas. Creating economic opportunity in rural areas to stem this intellectual drain is a must if these areas are to share in the prosperity so many others have enjoyed.

Leading the reinvigoration of the U.S. economy has been its overachievers, its small businesses. Of the 17.8 million new jobs created since 1981, over 60 percent have been in this type firm. Today, small businesses generate nearly 40 percent of our gross national product and employ 6 out of every 10 Americans. Similary, the rural economy, with the continuing decline of farm-supported employment, is growing more dependent on small firms. Rural areas, where 94 percent of all businesses are considered small, saw 63 percent of all new jobs come from firms employing fewer than 20 workers. Overall, however, while urban small businesses have enjoyed sustained, robust growth, rural small enterprises have grown at a rate 30 percent slower. What makes this lack of significant growth even more troubling to rural areas is the fact that nearly 60 percent of all rural workers are employed in small firms.

The reasons for the sluggishness of the rural economy are clear. A scarcity of needed capital has resulted in fewer business startups and expansions. The lack of coordination of Federal rural assistance programs has prohibited substantive progress from being made in most facets of rural life. The absence of an energetic rural small business advocate within the Federal Government has been a further hindrance to developing an awareness of the needs of rural entrepreneurs and how Federal resources can be marshalled to assist them. For the small businessperson trying to make a living in rural America, the deterioration or, in some instances, nonexistence of rural roads and bridges has impeded his ability to deliver his goods to the domestic and foreign marketplace. And, finally, in many cases, vital information needed by rural entrepreneurs to comply with technical Federal regulations has simply not been available.

To search for solutions to these problems, I turned to the people who must confront the problems of rural America every day: elected local officials, directors of economic development organizations, and small business groups, among others, who serve rural areas. Their recommendations were extensive and constructive and ranged from providing additional capital for enterprise development, technical assistance, infrastructure improvements, marketing assistance, help in identifying Federal, State, and local programs that offer guidance and support, to providing a permanent Federal voice to speak for the interests of rural small businesses. Many of these recommendations are now embodied in this legislative initiative. A fundamental belief underlying this legislation is that rural communities are best able to make decisions affecting their future. Local leaders must be given the opportunity to rebuild their small towns because they possess a lifetime of intimate knowledge of their community and the people who live there. The approach of the legislation, therefore, is to ensure that rural communities have the widest latitude in decisionmaking concerning the expenditure of Federal resources to achieve local economic development priorities and objectives. While this freedom is necessary for an effective, cohesive rural policy, the Federal Government has an appropriate oversight role to play in guaranteeing that investments in rural areas are sound, that taxpayer funds are wisely spent, and that the interests of rural communities are effectively served. It is this ambitious agenda which the legislation attempts to fulfill.

The Rural Small Business Enhancement Act of 1990 addresses the critical shortage of available capital by authorizing $300 million over the next 3 fiscal years for the establishment of a revolving loan fund to assist the startup and expansion of rural small business concerns. This infusion of funds would create a pool of capital—the lifeblood of all enterprises—to enable rural entrepreneurs to transform their fertile ideas into thriving venture. As demonstrated in other regions of the country, particularly urban areas, small businesses grow and spawn thousands of new jobs when they have access to adequate financing. It is time we unleash the power of rural entrepreneurs so they can lead their communities to new plateaus of prosperity and progress and improve the quality and diversity of opportunities for rural citizens. In turn, growth in businesses and jobs contributes to a broadening of the tax base, which enriches the community and makes possible improvements in education and health care.

To help nurture truly small rural firms, the bill would provide $120 million over the next 3 fiscal years to stimulate the development of small business incubators. Incubators are a vital new economic development tool which allow a business owner to concentrate in running his firm and finding new customers. An incubator provides a fledging small business with affordable office space, access to services such as telephones, fax machines, and photo copying as well as management and financial expertise. Recent studies have shown that a small business operated without the support of an incubator has about a 20-percent chance of survival. However, a small firm which is nurtured in an incubator sees its chance of survival rise to as high as 93 percent. I have been able to witness the impact of this new economic development tool firsthand. My home State of Pennsylvania has more incubators than any other State in the Union. This concept has had such a startling influence on the success rate of small firms that other countries are emulating this original American innovation. Today, there are over 200 incubators in Europe and others have sprung up in Canada, Japan, Australia, the Caribbean, China, Africa, South America, and the Philippines. Incubators are the wave of the future for small firms. I want rural small businesses in this country to ride the crest of this wave.

The legislation would also amend the Small Business Act to encourage the formation of small business investment companies in rural areas. These venture capital investment firms act in partnership with government to provide equity capital and long-term loans, as well as management assistance, to small businesses. SBIC's are privately owned and managed and make their own investment decisions. They raise private capital through investments made by individuals, corporations, banks and other institutional sources of financing. SBIC's have a strong belief in the free enterprise system and have worked diligently to bring the benefits of this system to thousands of Americans. Since 1958, SBIC's have invested nearly $7 billion in 85,000 small businesses. Over $1.2 billion of this assistance has been in equity capital. Small enterprises that have received SBIC-provided financing have experienced growth rates 10 times those of other small concerns. Small business investment companies can claim a great deal of the credit for launching several companies which today are successful leaders in their chosen industries. They include Cray Research, Midway Airlines, Apple Computer, and Federal Express. These companies, and other small businesses that have received funding from the SBIC Program, have produced hundreds of thousands of jobs as well as significant tax revenues for Federal State, and local governments.

The Rural Small Business Enhancement Act of 1990 would help facilitate the formation of rural small business investment companies by permitting contributions of up to 49 percent of the required capital to be provided by nonprofit institutions as well as State and local governments. Easing this restriction should act as an incentive for local economic development organizations to form small business investment companies. In addition, the SBIC would continue to be managed by the private sector since a majority of its board members would come from it. This would ensure the essential private sector nature of the rural small business investment company. Using the SBIC Program would enable rural communities to develop an entrepreneurial environment for small businesses and have a greater role to play in providing needed financing to nurture small enterprises and raise up a new generation of successful rural entrepreneurs.

The legislation also gives rural small businesses a more forceful voice in the Federal Government and ensures that their needs are made known to those who administer programs which affect them. Accordingly, the measure calls for the creation of the Office of Rural Affairs within the U.S. Small Business Administration. Its responsibility would be to represent the interests of rural small firms, monitor the award of procurement contracts to these concerns, and disseminate information concerning assistance programs available through the SBA, and other Federal agencies, to State and local governments, industries, and organizations that have vested interests in rural America. Further, this Office would provide, to these groups as well as to educational institutions located in rural areas, other information which might be helpful in improving the quality of economic life and opportunity for citizens of such areas.

This measure would also provide $1 million for a demonstration project to provide rural communities and their small firms with needed technical assistance. Many rural areas find it difficult to acquire expertise in areas such as business plan development and compliance with complicated Federal regulations. This legislation would provide access to experts who can assist rural areas by consulting and advising them on ways to diversify their economies by enticing or creating new industries. Specifically, the bill would provide that rural communities can receive up to $15,000 from the Federal Government to fund part of the salary and expenses of rural technical assistance specialists. Rural areas that receive this assistance would be required to submit to the Administrator of the SBA a report evaluating the effectiveness of these experts and make recommendations concerning the need for a permanent program of this kind.

The increased formation and growth of rural small businesses are greatly dependent on the ability of these concerns to sell their products both here and abroad. To achieve this goal, the legislation I am introducing today would provide $30 million in grant funds over the next 3 fiscal years to finance studies in areas such as expansion of domestic markets, import replacement, and export development and promotion for rural small firms. In many instances, rural areas are hindered by a lack of information. Studies funded by this program would help provide these areas with the knowledge needed to assist their small businesses in selling their goods and aid in the further diversification of the local economy. Further, as the world moves closer to becoming one market, it is critically important that all businesses, large and small, rural and urban, look overseas for potential customers. Studies have shown that only 8 percent of all small businesses with less than 100 workers are currently exporting. The remaining 92 percent represent a vast, untapped resource at which our efforts to create an export economy should be aimed. Recent data indicate that small firms with less than 100 employees account for 25 percent of all exporting companies. However, if all small firms in this type that produce exportable products or services were to export, they would account for a full 37 percent of exporting companies. For this reason, this legislation directs the Administrator of the Small Business Administration to undertake a comprehensive study of all Federal export assistance programs and make specific recommendations for action that should be taken by both the Congress and the various executive agencies to aid the entry of rural small businesses into international trade.

This measure would also authorize $15 million in grant moneys over the next 3 fiscal years to fund marketing studies and other projects designed to promote the growth of small business concerns in rural areas by increasing tourism and travel to such areas. These studies would focus attention on tourism and travel as an effective economic development tool for rural communities to use to attract visitors—and bring customers—to local small businesses. In this context, travel and tourism can be viewed as a means to invigorate local economies. Rural communities by their nature lack an industrial base and, in many instances, the only available avenue for growth lies in the utilization of their natural resources. Travel and tourism offer a way for local communities to capitalize on these natural and historic resources to build and strengthen their local economies. The fastest growing sector of the U.S. economy over the past several years has been in the area of services, and one of the largest segments of the service industry is travel and tourism. The travel industry alone is the third largest service industry in the United States. Small business has a vital role to play in this growth industry.

Together with small business, this industry has an unrealized potential for fostering new growth, spurring increased economic development, and creating new employment opportunities in rural communities. I am concerned that much of the scenic beauty, idyllic charm, folk culture, wholesome values, country life style, and genial hospitality of rural communities remains virtually undiscovered by most American and foreign travelers. Large cities have overshadowed rural areas as popular tourist attractions. Local communities have much to offer and we need to undertake serious efforts to assist these communities and their small businesses by encouraging tourism and travel in rural America.

It would prove fruitless to commit all of the above resources to the rural economy for the creation of new business and jobs as well as new studies to locate new markets if we did nothing to improve movement to and from rural areas. Nearly 40 years ago it became a national priority to end the isolation of rural America. To a large degree that problem ended a decade ago. Now, due to the deterioration of these transportation routes and the lack of resources committed to maintaining them, the fear of being cut off is resurfacing. The view has developed that infrastructure expenditures are wasteful and amount to little more than Federal jobs programs. Today, it is not only people in sparsely populated areas who are being cut off, and thus limited in securing employment in surrounding areas, but also the results of their labor. Infrastructure outlays, as a percent of Federal nondefense spending, were nearly 11 percent in 1963, but dropped to only 4.5 percent in 1988. Further, while the United States moves into greater competition with the other major industrialized nations of the West, it ranks last among these countries in the amount of money it commits to infrastructure construction and maintenance. This is a trend we cannot continue without monumental consequence for the future. The Rural Small Business Enhancement Act of 1989 would authorize, over the next 3 fiscal years, as additional $180 million above the current authorization level for the Secondary Rural Highway System Program. Though modest, I believe this amount represents a significant first step in providing rural American with a basic tool needed to strengthen its economy.

In addition to these improvements to facilitate rural commerce, this legislation provides $200 million in fiscal year 1991, 1992 and 1993 to promote safe travel in rural areas and to improve access to and enhance public enjoyment of cultural, historic, recreational, and scenic resources in rural America.

Further, the legislation calls for the creation of a national commission to undertake a thorough review of all assistance available to rural America and compile a comprehensive agenda, complete with specific legislative recommendations, to guide rural policy in the 21st century. To compile these guidelines, this panel would convene nationwide hearings to: define the proper role of the Federal Government in rural policy; review all current Federal programs targeted at rural areas and evaluate their effectiveness; make recommendations as to the continuation, improvement, or termination of these programs; determine what rural needs are currently not being met by the Federal programs; and, recommend more effective means of coordination of Federal rural policy under the possible direction of a single executive agency.

The measure would also direct the Administrator of the SBA to initiate a comprehensive review of Federal procurement policies and programs and submit to the Congress a report on how the goal of greater participation of rural small firms in Federal contract opportunities could be achieved. The Federal Government spends billions of dollars each year on the purchase of goods and services from U.S. businesses. The barriers that limit the competition of rural small concerns for Federal Government business and ultimately restrict their share of contract awards continue to deny the Federal Government and taxpayers of benefits. Since goods and services produced in rural areas can generally be purchased at prices significantly lower those produced in urban areas, considerable cost savings could inure to the benefit of taxpayers and the Government, a point not to be taken lightly at a time of a burgeoning Federal deficit. In addition, the Administrator would be required to submit annual reports to the Congress on the success of efforts to increase the participation of rural small businesses in Federal procurement opportunities and on the identification of continuing barriers that limit or preclude such participation.

Finally, in an effort to provide rural small businesses with needed information concerning Federal, State, and local rural programs, the Rural Small Business Enhancement Act of 1990 calls for the creation of a Catalog of Rural Assistance. This publication would outline rural programs offered by all levels of government and other organizations as well as provide points of contact for those seeking assistance from these programs. This information would be gathered individually by the various Federal agencies and departments which offer assistance to rural areas and subsequently compiled into a comprehensive catalog by the U.S. Small Business Administration. Having this information at their fingertips could save rural small entrepreneurs much time and frustration in locating assistance which might aid their businesses and also help to ensure that rural programs reach a wider audience and have a greater impact on rural areas.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation provides an opportunity to begin the process of reinvigorating rural America. Many efforts have been made over the years to achieve this result. Too often, however, priorities have changed and resources have been redirected. The consequences of this loss of direction are often too great for many rural citizens to bear. Each time this happens a few more people who were born and raised in these areas give up hope and move away. I think a little bit of America dies when this takes place. Most of the values which this Nation was built on and still holds dear have their roots in the rural areas of this country. A nation's greatest asset is its people; its greatest strength, their values. We must do more to protect our rural assets and preserve our rural strength. We must commit ourselves to the goal of helping rural America and those who live there. Let us begin now and not stop until this important work is finished.

MILK PRODUCERS FINANCIAL PROTECTION ACT

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing the Milk Producers Financial Protection Act, to establish a statutory trust for dairy producers to give them a priority lien on assets of a handler in the event a handler experiences financial difficulties.

The Milk Producers Financial Protection Act will amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 to establish a statutory trust for the benefit of unpaid milk producers. The act would be consistent with the trust granted to livestock and poultry producers through packers and stockyards.

The Milk Producers Financial Protection Act would create a priority lien for dairy producers by establishing a trust on assets on milk handlers in the event the handler files for bankruptcy or fails to make payment to a farmer. Milk producers will have security interest in inventories and receivables subject to trust and will be entitled to receive proceeds to the extent of the outstanding balance on cash sales. The trust would have unpaid dairy farmers have their claims of payment satisfied from a handler's assets before any secured interest is satisfied.

This trust to be granted to dairy producers would be considered a floating trust because the specific assets in this trust change from day to day. There is no requirement that a custodial account be established or that a third-party trustee be appointed. But, the handler would have a specific custodial obligation to the milk producers by keeping records of transactions.

Federal courts have held that in the event of the bankruptcy of a covered packer, producers must be paid from the trust assets before any secured creditors can be paid. The trust assets have been held to not be part of the bankruptcy estate and cannot be used to satisfy any creditors until producers have been paid. The Milk Producers Financial Protection Act would be consistent with that determination. Simply put, the Milk Producers Financial Protection Act would require producers of milk to have their payment claims satisfied from a handler's assets before any secured interest is satisfied.

A milk handler currently is able to offer as security for a loan the milk or milk products, or receivables or proceeds from sales which he has not paid for. The producer, who was responsible for raising, feeding and producing the milk for the handler is left unpaid, while secured creditors reap the reward of the dairy farmers' labors. It is not fair that a milk handler should be able to commit property as collateral for a loan for which he has not paid for and does not actually own, to allow a third party to stand ahead of the producers if the handler fails.

This does not provide a complete guarantee that a producer will be paid, but it will provide a great deal of security, security that will stand up in a bankruptcy proceeding. This act provides some future protection for dairy farmers against serious loss when dairy handlers go bankrupt.

In 1989, a dairy plant in Wisconsin filed for bankruptcy, owing 210 dairy farmers $2.5 million for their milk. The farmers had just delivered a month's production of milk to the processor, which then folded days before it was to pay farmers their monthly pay checks. It is uncertain if these farmers will receive payment for their milk, because under bankruptcy laws, the farmers are the last creditors in line to be paid. The financial status of several more processors who purchase directly from farmers are being closely monitored, with another bankruptcy possible this year. This situation exists in several other States.

In May, the Wisconsin Board of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection organized a task force on dairy plant security to develop recommendations for improving State laws, agency administrative rules, and enforcement of Wisconsin's Dairy Plant Security Program. One of the recommendations of the task force was the development of a mechanism to improve the legal standing of dairy farmers in Federal bankruptcy proceedings. The recommendation was to have Congress implement a statutory trust for dairy farmers similar to the trust granted to livestock and poultry producers through the Packers and Stockyards Division of USDA.

Our dairy farmers deliver milk to handlers daily. They should have some sense of security they will receive payment for their milk. The Milk Producers Financial Protection Act will provide that security.

SUMMARY OF MILK PRODUCERS FINANCIAL PROTECTION ACT

(a) Clarifies existing language under Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 to include milk, milk products and milk producers.

(b) Creates a priority lien for dairy producers by establishing a trust on assets on processors in the event a processor files for bankruptcy or fails to make payment.

The trust would have unpaid dairy farmers have their claims of payment satisfied from a handler's assets before any secured interest is satisfied.

This does not provide a complete guarantee that a producer will be paid, but it will provide a great deal of security, security that will stand up in a bankruptcy proceeding.

This trust granted for dairy producers would be considered a "floating trust" because the specific assets in this trust change from day to day. There is no requirement that a custodial account be established or that a third party trustee be appointed. The milk handler would have a specific custodial obligation to dairy producers.

Requires unpaid producers to file notice with the Secretary to preserve their rights as trust beneficiaries. Only those creditors who file timely notices, preserve their rights to trust benefits. Creditors who do not file timely, lose any rights they may have had.

The time for filing is set at 30 days after the date the debt becomes past due or 15 days when the producer has been notified that a payment instrument has been dishonored.

The notice informs the debtor of possible action against his trust assets. The notice alerts the Secretary so it can follow up in an effort to help resolve the problem informally. When the producers preserve their rights to trust benefits, the Secretary is given notice regarding the financial status of a handler.

(c) Provides the Secretary authority to enforce provisions of this Act.

(d) Makes "Dairy Producers Financial Protection Act" effective 90 days after enactment of the Act.

SELENGUT WINS ENVIRONMENTAL AWARD, SETS STANDARD FOR VIRGIN ISLANDS AND NATIONAL BUILDERS

HON. RON de LUGO

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, the island of St. John in the U.S. Virgin Islands is a rare natural treasure. In turn, it attracts rare people, who come to share their special talents and special ability to live with nature.

Developer Stanley Selengut is one of those rare people. We are fortunate to have a man with his talent, temperament and foresight in the U.S. Virgin Islands. Stanley, who built and operates the successful Maho Bay Campgrounds on one end of St. John, is in the process of building the Estate Concordia condominiums on the other end of the island.

Estate Concordia is already winning national awards for the environmental quality of its construction. Stanley was in Washington recently to receive the "Do as I Do Award" from the Tennessee Initiative for Environmental Sensitivity in Construction. This award is richly deserved. Estate Concordia is employing the very best in environmental design.

Stanley can justifiably say that his construction will be enhancing the environment on St. John. Not many developers can honestly make that statement. But not many developers use his careful style of construction—from pumping in cement through a hose instead of cutting a 20-foot road for cement trucks, to designing cantilevered galleries that go out over and through the trees without requiring needless destruction of vegetation. He is going on to reintroduce plant and animal species that thrived on St. John more than 200 years ago, before the island was cut for sugarcane. He may even find a way to revive some of the original hardwood trees from that era. He may come up with findings on how to reintroduce plant and animal species that will be worth study by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency or other Federal and private agencies dedicated to environmental protection.

Stanley Selengut is showing that these innovative design methods can be commercially successful. His methods are not extraordinarily expensive, but they require care and concern. Too often those latter qualities are missing from our development industry. Stanley uses brain power where too many other developers just use bulldozers.

Stanley's methods are worthy of this Do As I Do Award, and worthy of emulation by other builders. The Virgin Islands, more so than the mainland United States, has to use its limited land and natural resources with great care. All of our builders, whether they are designing houses, shops, or hotels, need to think about enhancing the environment. Sensitive environmental design is not a luxury. It is critical to our future, if we are to maintain the beauty that attracts millions of visitors to our shores. We cannot recreate the natural beauty that we have been blessed with, but if we are innovative and careful we can find a way to preserve our natural endowment.

Stanley's methods also present a model of cooperation. He works closely with our Planning and Natural Resources Department and other government agencies to share information and develop designs that meet the environmental codes as well as broader concerns of our community. He is open to the ideas of the St. John people, who will be living with his creation for years to come. He has the simple, but unusual, ability to listen to others.

Mr. Speaker, I truly hope other builders and developers will emulate Stanley Selengut's example and earn more awards for excellent environmental design in the Virgin Islands.

H.R. 2699

HON. JIM BATES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be the primary sponsor of H.R. 2699, a bill to completely phase out CFC's and other ozone-deleting chemicals on a rapid but sensible timetable. And I am proud to be working with my colleagues, Mr. BOEHLERT and Mr. WAXMAN, on a floor amendment to the Clean Air Act based on that bill.

With 159 cosponsors ready on that bill, it seems clear that the House of Representatives sees the importance of ridding the atmosphere of these chemicals, many of which also contribute to global warming and cause cancer. The overwhelming bipartisan passage of similar ozone-depletion amendments in the Senate bodes well for our efforts in the House.

I am displeased, Mr. Speaker, that the White House is so out of step with Congress, our European allies and the American people. Press reports indicate that our Government plans to oppose a plan intended to help developing countries reduce the use of ozone-depleting chemicals. Last year the administration endorsed a phaseout of CFC's only after the Europeans had proposed it first.

Mr. Speaker, it's time to take the lead. I urge my colleagues to adopt the Bates/Boehlert/Waxman amendment to the Clean Air Act.

NATIONAL PEACE OFFICER'S MEMORIAL DAY

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on National Peace Officer's Memorial Day to pay tribute to the men and women of the Alaska law enforcement community. This is a day when we stop to think about those who have given their lives to protect others, and also a day when we should remember those who continue to put their lives on the line so that we all may live in a safe and peaceful society.

It is a fitting tribute that ground has been broken here in Washington, DC, for a national memorial inscribed with the names of all the officers who have given their lives in the line of duty. On the wall will be inscribed the name of Officer Lou Mizelle, an Anchorage police officer who gave his life just 3 weeks after last year's police officer's memorial day. Also on that wall will be the name of a young Alaska State trooper who came to visit me in my Washington, DC, office and gave me a belt buckle as a keepsake. Before I could find a place to display the buckle, the young man had been cut down in performance of his duties.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that being a law enforcement officer is tough work. Alaskan cops face some of the toughest conditions in the world. They must brave subzero weather, icy streets, and long days of winter darkness. Their job is often thankless, lacking the glamour and excitement that television cop shows invent.

Today, all over this country, communities will be remembering the fallen heroes of law enforcement. But I am afraid that a memorial day or even a monument to the dead is not enough. We must rededicate ourselves to the eradication of serious crime in this country. We need not look beyond the very neighborhood in which this great deliberative body is situated to see the crippling effects of crime.

Together we must work to find innovative solutions to the problems that confront our justice system and the apparent failure of our attempts to rehabilitate and deter hardened criminals. Together we must work for a day when we can remember cops for serving society, rather than dying for it.

MACKEY HONORED

HON. BUTLER DERRICK

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Harold J. Mackey from Williamston, SC, who was awarded an honorary doctorate degree in education from South Carolina State College this past weekend. For more than three decades, Dr. Mackey has been a highly successful teacher, adviser and community leader. He has been active in business, political, and civic activities. He has served as mayor pro tempore of Williamston since 1976, on the board of the South Carolina Municipal Association, and the advisory board of First Union National Bank of Williamston. Mr. Mackey is the business manager for New Prospect Baptist Church, where he is also a deacon and Sunday school teacher.

Dr. Mackey's dedication and excellence in the field of education and community service is exemplary. He has been honored by the South Carolina House of Representatives and the Senate more than once. He has received the educational specialist degree from Clemson University in administration and supervision. Dr. Mackey has also been certified as a principal, supervisor and superintendent.

Dr. Mackey has been a highly successful teacher and motivator for more than 30 years, as his office's four walls of ribbons, plaques and trophies demonstrate. I congratulate Dr. Mackey for being such a source of strength and inspiration to all of us who know him.

A TRIBUTE TO CAROLYN J. CIMINI

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to congratulate Carolyn J. Cimini, of Providence, RI, this year's recipient of the Congressman RONALD K. MACHTLEY Academic and Leadership Excellence Award for Bishop Keough Regional High School, in Pawtucket, RI.

This award is presented to the student, chosen by Bishop Keough Regional High School, who demonstrates a mature blend of academic achievement, community involvement, and leadership qualities.

Carolyn has clearly met these criteria during her years at Bishop Keough High School. As an honor student at Bishop Keough, Carolyn has been selected to the National Honor Society, the Rhode Island Honor Society, and Who's Who Among American High School Students. Her extra-curricular activities include the Model Legislature, student Council, drama, basketball, and Girls Scouting. Carolyn is very active in all of Bishop Keough's fundraising events. She has participated in the Brown University Summer Program for 2 years. She has received a $5,000 Presidential Scholarship from Rivier College and has also been accepted into the honors program at Rhode Island College.

I commend Carolyn for her outstanding achievements and wish her all the best in her future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO DR. JOHN H. CUMBERLAND

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an individual who has labored for a better environment for us all in conjunction with a sense of responsibility for a strong and stable economy. For 37 years, Dr. John H. Cumberland has taught economics at the University of Maryland. In addition, he has directed the University's Bureau of Business and Economic Research for 20 years. He will retire from those two posts on June 30 of this year, and I would like to take this opportunity to commend him on his years of service.

Dr. Cumberland's work for the State of Maryland and for the Nation goes well beyond serving as a university faculty member. He has organized five conferences on the Chesapeake Bay, a vital natural resource to the State of Maryland and indeed the whole Mid-Atlantic region. He has also put tireless hours into efforts to protect the air, water, and land everywhere from pollution.

Most importantly, he has sought to bring together the government, scientists, and economists to improve the quality of life for all in a broad and responsible manner. He is a shining example to us all of the way to real progress for a better world.

On the eve of his retirement, I hope my colleagues will join me in congratulating Dr. Cumberland for his years of dedicated service, and wish him the best in the future.

WE MUST SUPPORT LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to draw attention to the ongoing struggle of the people of Lithuania to restore their independence and to express my support for a strong United States role in helping them to do so.

The Lithuanian people are not declaring independence. They have merely declared the restoration of their former internationally recognized status as a free and independent state. The United States has never recognized the forcible incorporation of the Baltic States into the Soviet Union. The present crisis over Lithuania calls upon us to prove in deeds what we have for so long proclaimed in words.

The United States has long stood as the guarantor of the right of peoples to choose their own destiny. Our 45-year vigilance in Europe played an important role in the release of the Soviet grip on the nations of Eastern Europe. The once-captive peoples of those countries continue to thank us for our stance that has led to their liberation. However, the job is only half done, for the Baltic peoples, among others, remain captive.

The leadership of the Soviet Union, to its credit, has displayed a commendable willingness to undo the Stalinist conquest and repression of Eastern Europe and to acknowledge its predecessors' acts of evil, such as the Katyn massacre. However, it continues to perpetuate the subjugation of the Baltic States in defiance of international law and of the very ideals of self-determination to which the Soviet leadership has given explicit acceptance in regard to its former client states in Eastern Europe.

The Soviets' continued domination has been demonstrated in their response to the declaration of independence by the freely elected Government of Lithuania. Such an expression of the popular will has been met with a determined effort by the Soviet authorities to engage in war of attrition with the will of the Lithuanian people. To this end, the Soviets have imposed an economic embargo on essential fuels and a naval blockade to prevent the importation of foodstuffs and other vital goods. The Soviet Army has undertaken a campaign of strong-arm tactics and intimidation. It has occupied public buildings and arrested young Lithuanians who no longer wished to serve in an army of occupation in their own land.

The administration must not implicitly support these Soviet actions by its resounding silence on the matter. The United States must lead world condemnation of those who continue to intimidate and subjugate the Baltic peoples.

Recently the members of the Congressional Helsinki Commission were very fortunate to be able to meet with a courageous woman, Mrs. Kazimiera Prunskiene, the Prime Minister of Lithuania. In a very articulate and well-reasoned statement, she requested United States consideration for the recognition of the independent state of Lithuania. This week the Baltic Republics requested admission to the United Nations and to the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe. I urge the strongest support for these requests, both in Congress and in the administration.

ST. CHARLES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR AWARD

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute to a man whose initiative, ingenuity, and determination have guided him to build a thriving business out of a failing one; his story is a tribute to the entrepreneurial spirit which has made America great. It is with great pleasure that I salute Mr. Roy Kohrs for being named the St. Charles Chamber of Commerce Small Business Person of the Year.

Roy L. Kohrs epitomizes the fine standards set for the Small Business Person of the Year Award of the St. Charles Chamber of Commerce. The past 6 years have seen him meet the challenges of a very competitive business environment, setting and meeting goals regularly. He has contributed significantly as a part of the St. Charles business community and the grocery industry for almost a quarter of a century. Truly he has earned the respect and trust of the St. Charles residents and now it is the community's turn to commend him, to thank him, and to recognize him for his contributions and unselfish commitment.

Mid-Towne IGA has a long and not always prosperous history. However, the ups and downs of the store illustrate the resourcefulness and innovative thinking of Roy and his partner and show that there is a place in the economy for the small business person. In Roy we find evidence that the small business person can compete against the large chains and show a profit. The key for Mid-Towne IGA has been a responsiveness to the needs and wants of the community and that is what has made the store so successful. It is responsive, in a sensitive and innovative way, to the demands of the community consumers. Mid-Towne IGA is truly a reflection of the St. Charles residents and has been able to profit because of its attention to its service area. That, of course, is one of the things that makes Mid-Towne IGA unique and that uniqueness has been produced by the farsightedness of its co-owner Roy Kohrs.

Roy contributes more to the community than his unique Mid-Towne IGA. He is an active participant in the Salvation Army's fund drive. He served as advanced commitment director of Our Savior Lutheran Church and the Lutheran High School's fund drives. He is active in the St. Charles Rotary Club and is involved with Christians Organized for Parochial Education. He is a trained Christian counselor as a Stevens minister and is currently a member of the church choir and has served as chairman of trustees and as an elder. To emphasize that Roy gives back more than he takes, Mid-Towne IGA has featured a Christmas campaign since 1982 in which 1 percent of all store receipts for the month of December are donated to the Salvation Army or to area churches as designated by customers.

Mr. Speaker, I must further compliment the St. Charles Chamber of Commerce for it's insight in commending the small business people in that area, for small business is one of our economy's greatest assets. I ask this assembly to join me in saluting Mr. Roy Kohrs, St. Charles Chamber of Commerce Small Business Person of the Year.

TODD REED

HON. GUY VANDER JAGT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, some time ago, it was my intention to rightfully single out a remarkable achievement by one of my constituents, Todd Reed, of Ludington, MI. For one reason or another, however, that honor was overlooked at that time. Thank goodness, we often have a second chance and I am taking advantage of my second chance today to salute Todd Reed and to provide the deserved recognition in the Congress that he earned in 1988.

In that year, Mr. Reed was named the "Outstanding Enlisted Coast Guard Reservist in the Nation" by the Naval Enlisted Reserve Association. He certainly deserves our most heartfelt congratulations and thanks for all he has given to the Coast Guard and to his community. So, while the award in question was given to Mr. Reed in 1988, there is no limit on our ability to recognize and salute excellence and dedication.

I know my colleagues share this sentiment and will join me in paying tribute to Todd Reed. The following newspaper article from the Ludington Daily News underlines Mr. Reed's outstanding accomplishments. We are fortunate to have men like Todd Reed among us and I know we all wish him the very best in his future endeavors:

LUDINGTON MAN IS RESERVIST OF YEAR

GREEN BAY, WI.—A Coast Guard Reservist from Ludington has been honored as the Outstanding Enlisted Coast Guard Reservist in the nation for 1988 by the Naval Enlisted Reserve Association.

Boatswainmate First Class Todd Reed, whose civilian occupation is chief photographer and staff writer for the Ludington Daily News, was selected for the award from amongst more than 10,000 enlisted Coast Guard Reservists.

The award was presented Oct. 27 at the national convention of the NERA at Green Bay.

"Of all the candidates considered by the Selection Board, your accomplishments as a Coast Guard Reservist and your contributions to your community reflect the quality and devotion to duty expected of all members of the Coast Guard Reserve," NERA President Edmund Cuoto stated.

Reed was nominated for the award by Coast Guard Reserve Unit Traverse City, of which he has been a member for nearly 17 years, and by Cmdr. L.K. Walton, commander of Coast Guard Reserve Group Muskegon.

"BM1 Reed represents that spirit and dedication to service to the Coast Guard and Reserve which makes the Coast Guard Reserve a vital, integral part of the Coast Guard's service to the American public," Commander Walton stated in his nominating letter.

A rescue boat operator (coxswain) at Coast Guard Station Ludington one weekend a month during the boating season, Boatswainmate BM1 Reed has helped carry out dozens of search and rescue missions while augmenting at Station Ludington the past nine years.

Petty Officer Reed has also been heavily involved in the training of Reserve boat crew members for the past 13 years since qualifying as a boat coxswain. He has served as an instructor for rigorous two-week Reserve Lifeboat Schools held at Stations Ludington and Charlevoix and this year attended the Coast Guard's National Motor Lifeboat School at Cape Dissapointment, WA.

"Despite increasingly more difficult standards and complex knowledge required over the years for full coxswain certification, BM1 Reed has maintained full coxswain certification every year since his initial qualification in 1975," Walton stated. " This has required many hours of unpaid and unrecognized dedication in training time put in over and above regularly scheduled drills and active duty for training. Not only has this resulted in BM1 Reed's outstanding abilities as a coxswain, but it has also enabled his section at Coast Guard Station Ludington to provide 100 percent relief augmentation for Regular personnel. Needless to say, this enhances respect for the Reserve program, while providing an essential service to the Coast Guard and public."

Capt. Carmen Fitzgerald, Chief of Readiness and Reserve for Coast Guard District Nine, in presenting the NERA award to Reed, noted that the selection was based not only on performance and leadership abilities, but on community involvement as well.

"As a photographer and reporter, BM1 Reed has used his position to promote the Coast Guard through appropriate and timely newspaper articles which emphasize the critical role played by the Coast Guard on Lake Michigan," Walton stated. "Additionally he has set an example of the selfless dedication hoped for from every Reservist by saving the life of a near drowning victim in 1979."

Reed has also taught boating Rules of the Road to the public for the Ludington Flotilla of the Coast Guard Auxiliary and recently joined that volunteer organization. He also coaches little league baseball.

Reed's wife Debbie and sons Tad, Brad and Willie accompanied him to the convention and were called upon by Captain Fitzgerald to join him in accepting the award.

A TRIBUTE TO ROBERT MEDEIROS

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to congratulate Robert Medeiros, of Pawtucket, RI, this year's recipient of the Congressman RONALD K. MACHTLEY Academic and Leadership Excellence Award for Charles E. Shea High School, in Pawtucket, RI.

This award is presented to the student, chosen by Charles E. Shea High School, who demonstrates a mature blend of academic achievement, community involvement, and leadership qualities.

Robert has clearly met these criteria during his years at Shea High School. Robert is graduating third in his class and is an officer in the Key Club. Robert also participates in the Upward Bound Program at Rhode Island College.

I commend Robert for his outstanding achievements and wish him all the best in his future endeavors.

TESTIMONY OF DR. BAUMEISTER

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues testimony of Dr. Alfred A. Baumeister before the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education on April 24, 1990.

Dr. Baumeister is professor of psychology at Vanderbilt University, located in my congressional district, and director of its John F. Kennedy Center for Research and Education and Human Development.

Professor Baumeister is a world authority on stereotypy and self-injurious behavior and his research has contributed to the development of treatment programs for behavior that were once regarded as untreatable.

I found Dr. Baumeister's testimony most enlightening and hope that my colleagues will too. The testimony is as follows:

TESTIMONY OF DR. BAUMEISTER

FAMILY CONCERNS

A week ago I met with parents and children at the Kennedy Center's Susan Gray School for Children, the largest early intervention program in Middle Tennessee. There I talked with families whose children have diverse problems such as Down syndrome and cerebral palsy. I met a foster father of two children who have been abused. Many of the children are at risk for health disorders and future learning difficulties in part because of poverty. Here are some of the concerns these parents had.

1. Parents need help to keep their children in their homes and communities and out of residential institutions that are also more costly to the public. They need help in the form of early intervention services, day care, respite care.

2. They need good quality early intervention services that help their children develop to their full potential. Unfortunately, urban programs have waiting lists. And in some rural areas, no programs exist.

3. They're worried about schools providing an appropriate, individualized education for their children. Despite federal laws mandating education in "least restrictive environment," parents find their children most often assigned to segregated special education classrooms or even segregated special education schools.

4. They know we need to change education and training and public attitudes so that children with disabilities have a future as productive citizens.

5. And they're worried about money—money to pay for medical and educational services. Let me give you an example of the "catch-22" faced by a mother who is vice president of Davidson County Association for Retarded Citizens. She stopped working at the birth of her child who is blind and hearing impaired and mentally retarded. Now that her child is school-aged, she could return to work—except the family would become ineligible to receive Medicaid. Their child could not receive coverage under her husband's employer-provided medical policy because the disabilities represent a pre-existing condition. Despite good intentions, obstacles and disincentives are created. Not only do such barriers frustrate families, but they end up costing us more as a society. We require resolve and research to remove these barriers. As an example of what can be done, the Tennessee Comptroller's Office has certified that flexible use of the Adult Medicaid Waiver for community services resulted in a savings of over $8 million in two years that otherwise would have been spent on unnecessary institutionalization.

RESEARCH

Researchers at Tennessee's John F. Kennedy Center, and at the other eleven national mental retardation research centers, are helping to solve the problems these families and families across the nation face. They conduct basic research—on genetics, on cell biology, on the development and plasticity of the brain—that will one day help prevent mental retardation. They also conduct applied research on the practical issues that are of direct concern to the families I met. The concept of Head Start grew from early education research at the Kennedy Center. Researchers there are giving free training to parents whose children are delayed in using language. Special educators are working with students, teachers, and parents in an inner city school to develop a model for improving the performance of low-achieving students. A developmental psychologist is studying the family origins of aggressive behavior disorders. These are but a few examples of the ways in which research in just one center is making a difference.

The Congress must respond by providing more adequate funding of these research efforts. Support of this national research endeavor is eroding. Despite apparent dollar increases annually, support for research on children and families—relative to inflation, other priorities, and increasing risk factors such as poverty—has been seriously compromised. Many morbidity problems are actually on the increase, facts documented by the President's Committee on Mental Retardation, the Children's Defense Fund, Dr. Baumeister and others.

I've supported a strong national defense. But funding for programs that benefit our nation's children—especially children at risk because of disability of poverty—also amounts to national defense. During my visit to the Kennedy Center, I reminded Dr. Baumeister of the poem "The Ambulance Down in the Valley." Our nation's children are on the cliff's edge and instead of building fences, we put ambulances at the bottom to pick up the pieces. "Ambulances" are expensive—neonatal intensive care, "AIDS" and "crack" babies boarding their short lives in hospitals, school drop out, illiteracy, drugs and crime. We are reluctant to commit adequate funds to "fences"—to research to help prevent disability; to prenatal and postnatal care and immunization and early intervention and supported employment. We already have the knowledge to accomplish many of these goals, but research is required to understand how to implement these programs, to appreciate the balance between costs and effects, and how to alter systems and remove barriers so that all children at risk receive the best this nation has to offer.

Congress needs to reverse the downward trend of research funding for developmental disorders and other health problems and recommit ourselves to this national research effort to prevent disability and to improve the lives of those affected by disability.

Speaking for the directors of the national mental retardation research centers, Dr. Baumeister will be giving you more specific data on these matters. What I want to carry to you are the concerns and needs of families whose children have disabilities. The Association of the Retarded Citizens of the United States, the largest of the disability advocacy groups, I believe, has articulated a national goal to which I enthusiastically subscribe: "Reliable federal support for basic and applied research relevant to the improvement of services for people with mental retardation and for the prevention of mental retardation."

We hear considerable talk these days about repairing the infrastructure. When it comes to the health and well-being of our nation's children, research is the infrastructure. Without it, public service programs cannot be as cost-effective. Without it, we fail to prevent disability. Children are the victims.

THE ASSASSINATION OF DR. KAZEM RAJAVI

HON. THOMAS J. BLILEY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I have learned of the assassination of a great educator and a paradigm of service to the cause of human rights in Iran, Dr. Kazem Rajavi. Dr. Rajavi was the brother of Mr. Massoud Rajavi, the leader of the Iranian resistance against the clerical dictatorship in Iran.

Dr. Rajavi, born on February 18, 1934, in Iran, faithfully devoted his life to the defense of basic human rights in Iran for the past 19 years. He strove to expose to the international community the crimes and repressive policies of the former regimes. Dr. Rajavi was a resident of France from 1957 to 1968 and subsequently resided in Switzerland, where he was granted asylum. He had six doctorate degrees in the fields of law, political science, and sociology from the universities of Paris and Geneva, where he held professorship's posts for nearly 10 years.

After the Shah's fall, Dr. Rajavi was Iran's first Ambassador to the U.N. headquarters in Europe. However, shortly after his appointment, he resigned his post in protest to the clerical-terrorist dictatorship which was taking shape. Since 1981, when the National Council of Resistance [NRC] was formed by Mr. Massoud Rajavi, Dr. Rajavi represented the NRC in a variety of political and human rights circles where he addressed the Iranian stifling political situation and exposed the flagrant violations of the most fundamental human rights by the clerics ruling Iran.

As a well-known activist of human rights, on the international scene, Dr. Rajavi had been threatened with death on numerous occasions yet he continued to bravely stand before the various organs of the United Nations, devoting more than 9 years of his life to a full-fledged struggle for human rights and for exposing the atrocious policies of the Iranian religious tyranny.

Through Dr. Rajavi's unrelenting efforts, the Khomeini regime's leaders had been condemned by the international assemblies, including the U.N. General Assembly and the Human Rights Commission, over the past 2 years.

On April 24, 1990, this great defender of the rights of the Iranian people was shot to death outside his home in Geneva. Though the Geneva police have yet to definitively determine those at the root of the assassination, it has been termed a professional hit by the international community.

With his murder, we have lost an outstanding advocate of human rights, a man who had great confidence in the imminent victory of the Iranian people's ideals of freedom and democracy. He so humbly rendered invaluable service to the just struggle of the Iranian people for peace, freedom, and respect for human rights and dignity.

We are honored today to salute Dr. Rajavi for giving his life of service and his profound commitment to the rights of his people.

While we rise to pay special tribute to this prominent leader of the human rights and freedom for the people of Iran, we express our deep condolences to his family, especially his brother Mr. Massoud Rajavi. I know that they will be comforted by the knowledge that Dr. Rajavi served his country and people by the best of his abilities.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to urge my colleagues to join me in condemning the gross violations of human rights in Iran and in condemning the acts of terrorism perpetrated by the Iranian authorities. I would also like to take this opportunity to ask my colleagues to join with me in a moment of silence.

FLIGHT ATTENDANT SAFETY PROFESSIONALS' DAY

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, 60 years ago today, Ellen Church boarded a Boeing 80 Trimotor for a 20-hour flight from Oakland, CA to Chicago, IL, and permanently changed aviation history. Ellen was our Nation's first flight attendant; today 90,000 flight attendants protect over 419 million passengers per year.

Most of my colleagues in the House travel between Washington and our districts on commercial flights each week. Americans board thousands of airline flights each year. Yet most of us hardly notice the crucial safety function provided by our Nation's flight attendants. These courageous women and men play a vital role in aviation safety.

Most airline passengers are fortunate enough to see only the service-related duties of flight attendants, however these duties are a distant second compared to the responsibilities faced when an emergency occurs. Flight attendants are trained to handle a wide variety of emergency situations: medical emergencies, in-flight fires, decompressions, hijackings or other terrorist acts, preparation for an emergency landing, and evacuation of a burning aircraft—something they can accomplish in less than 90 seconds. Flight attendants are skilled professionals who—in an emergency—risk their lives to protect passengers from harm.

Mr. Speaker, on this, the 60th anniversary of the flight attendant profession, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring House Joint Resolution 533 so that we may commemorate these unsung safety professionals on July 19, 1990.

BOB BARTH

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the State of New Mexico and the city of Santa Fe are in mourning. We have lost a dear friend. Robert J. Barth, known to most of us as simply "Bob," passed away last week at the young age of 43. He had covered our city and our State for the last 23 years as a radio reporter. Covering everything from politics to social events, Bob earned our State's respect—he was our finest journalist.

His enormously popular morning radio show was truly the voice of the people of northern New Mexico. As one of the people he covered, I can testify to Bob's consummate professionalism. He worked exceptionally hard, always did his homework and was unfailingly fair and accurate.

But Bob Barth had another dimension that made him stand out, a sweetness of spirit and love for his fellow man that colored his coverage of the news and his day-to-day life. He was living proof of the importance of being an outstanding man first.

The Santa Fe New Mexican published an outstanding editorial that I hope my colleagues take a moment to read. It accurately describes how so many of us northern New Mexicans relied on Bob for news and information, for his friendship. He was part of all of our families. We will miss him.

BOB BARTH

Many Santa Feans made decisions in their daily lives based on what Bob Barth said in the morning.

He is gone now. He died early yesterday from a heart attack. He was only 43. Santa Fe just won't be the same for many people without waking up to Bob Barth.

Every morning, he talked about what the weather and traffic were like, and gave the highlights of local news and sports. He commented on politics, of which his knowledge was great. Many people depended on him for fast, up-to-the-minute legislative coverage.

He chatted amiably on the air with fellow broadcasters or with callers to the station, urging them to call in to express their views on virtually any subject. He wished them happy birthdays and anniversaries and informed tourists and residents alike of the calender of events in the community he loved.

He played pop music and rattled off fact after fact about entertainers and songs in between spinning "oldies." He was a sports fan, and expressed special delight when the Los Angeles Dodgers won. He had his son, Kevin, read sports news on KMIK. At the end of Kevin's reports, Bob would thank his son and often tell him, "I love you."

KMIK programming was literally built around Bob Barth. He was the main man in local radio. But Bob Barth was a big fan of life, too. He took time to talk to everybody and hear them out, on or off the air, whether they were governors or people from less celebrated walks of life. He was not burdened with the cynicism that besets many journalists after years in the business; Bob could find something positive about nearly everything.

Bob Barth wasn't just a voice on the radio. He was out and around Santa Fe, the city he had grown up in and which he cared about so much he wouldn't leave, even for broadcast opportunities elsewhere. He could be found working out of the Capitol newsroom, serving as master of ceremonies at civic events, moderating panel discussions (as he did just last week at an affordable housing seminar sponsored by local Realtors), dressing as Santa Claus for Christmas parties for children, dancing, conducting interviews with politicians and state officials at The Bull Ring restaurant.

As a newsman for more than 20 years in Santa Fe, Bob Barth reported not just on local radio, but with a syndicated statewide program with colleague Ernie Mills, and with news reports from the Capitol for KOB-AM in Albuquerque. He was not only a fair and accurate reporter, but an especially productive one. He broke many stories, and four times won national Associated Press Broadcasters awards. He was a terrifically hard worker. He'd cover a City Council meeting that lasted until midnight and be on the air for his 6 a.m. show, and never complain about it.

The New Mexican expresses its condolences to Bob Barth's immediate family in this time of sorrow. A larger family—the general community of Santa Fe—mourns his passing.

A TRIBUTE TO CHRISTINE KEEGAN

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to congratulate Christine Keegan, of Woonsocket, RI, this year's recipient of the Congressman RONALD K. MACHTLEY Academic and Leadership Excellence Award for the Woonsocket Area Vocational-Technical Facility.

This award is presented to the student, chosen by the Woonsocket Area Vocational-Technical Facility, who demonstrates a mature blend of academic achievement, community involvement, and leadership qualities.

Christine is an active VICA member and was the VICA State parliamentarian for 1989-90. She has won gold medals in the VICA State competition in child care and prepared speech and a silver medal in job skills demonstration.

I commend Christine for her outstanding achievements and wish her all the best in her future endeavors.

A SALUTE TO MANAGEMENT WEEK IN AMERICA

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the men and women who are leading American business into the 21st century.

As many of my colleagues know, the week of June 4 through June 9 is Management Week in America. During that week, the National Management Association will highlight its objectives to develop and recognize management as a profession, and to promote our free enterprise system. The association is the largest nonprofit organization of its type with more than 75,000 members covering the entire spectrum of American business, industry, and organizations in the public sector.

Since its inception in 1978, Management Week in America has grown in recognition and activities each year. President Reagan issued a proclamation in support of the 1983 observance, and in 1984 he was selected by the cosponsors of Management Week as the Manager of the Year.

The chapter representing my constituents in the San Fernando, Santa Clarita, Simi, and Conejo valleys will present its Manager of the Year Award on June 15.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge my colleagues to join me in commemorating Management Week in America, and in supporting policies to make our free enterprise system stronger and more able to meet the economic challenges of the years to come.

SUPPORT FOR SMALL BUSINESS ACT REAUTHORIZATION

HON. RICHARD RAY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my support for H.R. 4793, the Small Business Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 1990.

I want to commend the chairman of the Small Business Committee, Representative JOHN LAFALCE, for putting together a thorough and thoughtful measure which I am pleased to cosponsor. Two major provisions which I want to single out are the sections relating to the Service Corps of Retired Executives [SCORE] and the Small Business Development Center [SBDC] Program.

The SCORE Program enlists retired businessmen as volunteers to counsel fledgling businesses and offer their expertise and advice. This program has been very successful. I have met with SCORE volunteers in my district, and I know they have a lot to offer a new small business. Increased funding for SCORE is money well spent. SCORE helps prevent business failures thus creating jobs and preventing loan defaults.

The SBDC Program also is a cost-effective program jointly funded by the Federal and State governments. We are fortunate that Georgia has one of the best SBDC programs in the Nation, and we are very proud of the job they do in providing technical assistance to small businesses. The Georgia SBDC headquarters is located at the University of Georgia in Athens, and they operate a regional center in Columbus, GA. Last year, the SBDC Program served 635 businesses in my district, the Third District of Georgia.

Both the SCORE and SBDC Programs provide a real return on the dollars spent investing in their programs. They help small businesses during their most difficult years—the startup years. Once these businesses get on their feet, they continue to grow thus generating jobs and oftentimes leading to the creation of new related businesses.

It is very important, in my opinion, to keep small businesses motivated. Our Nation finds itself in a precarious situation. The budget deficit is increasing, corporate profits are down, and inflation and interest rates are increasing. Those of us in Congress must be careful not to mandate new costly employee benefits on business. Businesses are already heavily shackled with Government mandates, and anymore will ultimately lead to slower business growth and an increased number of people out of work.

For this reason, I will continue to vote in a way which will keep business strong and motivated. I believe a vote for the Small Business Act Reauthorization is such a vote, and I encourage my colleagues to closely study this bill and give it their support.

BEN BLAZ SAYS: SI YU'OS MAASE, MANAMKO

HON. BEN GARRIDO BLAZ

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BLAZ. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 12th anniversary of the establishment of Senior Citizens' Month for my district's manamko. Nationally, this commemoration goes back to 1963 when the late President John F. Kennedy first gave national status to what has become an annual affair known today as Senior Citizens' Month.

While senior citizens are venerated in most countries of the world and in most cultures, we on Guam have always given extraordinary respect to our manamko—senior citizens. In Guam the manamko are revered and sought out as the wisest voices in the community. For this year's celebration I have dedicated the following statement to honor the wisest citizens of my district, the manamko.

Much will be said today in praise of the contributions that you, the manamko, have made to the strength and development of Guam. And that's as it should be. We would not be where we are today without you. You are the ones who began the process of political autonomy in the years before the war—a process that today is beginning to bloom and, God willing, will reach full flower with the realization of commonwealth. You are the forbearers whose sacrifices ensured that later generations were well educated and well equipped to lead the territory through both peaceful and troubled times. And you are the ones who guided the territory in the infancy of its economic development which today is reaching its maturity.

Guam has changed. That is inevitable. Like all life forms, a society either grows or it withers. There is no middle ground. But that's not to say that all change is good. There was a time when every society honored its older people. It was readily recognized that without them the current generation would not be. That is no longer the case in the modern age. We need only look to our fellow Americans on the mainland to see how different the world has become.

There, as on Guam, the month of May is dedicated to the elderly. Proclamations honoring them have been signed or soon will be signed by the President, the Governors of the various States, and mayors of cities. And yet I can assure you that events honoring the achievements of the older generaiton, if held at all, are celebrated in retirement homes and community centers dedicated to the care of the elderly. The aged are left to applaud themselves. Community-wide recognition, where all join to express their gratitude for what the elderly have accomplished, is rare. Indeed, it might be extinct.

We have not reached that point on Guam. The events here today and the various celebrations around the island throughout the month are ample proof of that. But the fact that we are not yet there does not mean that we are not in danger of drifting in that direction. Change may be inevitable. But it need not be destructive to what is fundamental to us as a people. We see change for the good all about us. Progress is being made on the return of excess lands, and there are encouraging signs of movement on war reparations. And our long sought recognition of political autonomy is being realized.

But in other areas, we must go despacio to make sure we do not lose our identity as a people. To accomplish that we must control growth to ensure that our future remains in our hands. Unless we do this, what makes Guam unique will be gone even before we know it is being lost.

I share with you the same desire that our children's grandchildren enjoy the same easy access to the beaches for their picnics that we have traditionally enjoyed; for, after all, they are our beaches.

I long with you to hear once again the birds singing in the island's jungles and forests as they did before others brought the snake to our island years ago.

I want the descendants of our people to be the business leaders and professionals of our island, not the minions of foreign investors.

I wish our future generations to revel in the familiar lilt of their native tongue.

And I want to smile when I see the younger generations—by tone of voice, by gesture, and by place of honor—still respecting their manamko as we do today, thus insuring that in time they, too, as manamko in their golden years will enjoy the harvest in the autumn of their lives.

WE SHOULD WORK TO AVERT WAR BETWEEN INDIA AND PAKISTAN

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, tensions with significant international implications are rising in Jammu and Kashmir State of India. This regional conflict should be of great interest to us because, if left on its current course, it promises to escalate to a full fledged war with the possibility of nuclear war.

It is of significance that when India gained its independence in 1947, the approximately 560 native States were released from their treaty ties to Great Britain. In the face of a tribal invasion of Kashmir, the ruler of Kashmir asked the Government of India for military assistance and acceded to India on October 26, 1947.

Regrettably, India and Pakistan fought over this territory in 1948 and 1965. Recent events, if they continue, strongly suggest that the potential for another war is great. With war comes not only death and destruction for the people of India and Pakistan, but the threat of toppling a fledgling democracy in Pakistan. Military hardliners and antidemocratic fundamentalist groups, blinded by their hatred for the popularly elected Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, seem willing to escalate the crises into all out war, and in the process risk destroying their own country. The ultimate victim of this plot is not only democracy in Pakistan, but the Pakistani people themselves. We all know that the highest number of casualties will not be from the ranks of the combatants, let alone those military extremists who are risking the deaths of their countrymen for their own selfish cause, but rather the same poor population they claim that they care for.

It must be remembered that the original British policy of divide-and-rule has already netted a tremendous loss of Hindu and Muslim lives. No amount of blame or territorial gain can console the heart of a bereaved mother, widow, or child whether Muslim or Hindu.

The past military dictatorship in Pakistan helped precipitate the current crisis. Evidence of Pakistani military training of Kashmiri nationalists, since 1984, has been verified by independent sources. India's Government, however, should shoulder its share of the blame for its failure to allow more independence for the people of Jammu and Kashmir. It is sad to see the forces of extremism, triumph once again, as Hindus and Muslims face the possibility of another bloodbath. The Government of India should not allow itself to fall victim to the chauvinism of some Hindus, but rather should redress past mistakes by allowing the National Conference Party to operate autonomously, as it once did. It should also initiate immediate reforms in the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

The Jammu and Kashmir State situation could possibly be the catalyst in inflaming a larger conflagration between India and Pakistan.

Both countries have stockpiled their arsenals in past years to a dangerous level. Between 1983 and 1987, India imported at least $7.6 billion worth of arms, while Pakistan received $1.5 billion in United States military aid since 1981, including 40 F-16 fighters, and expects delivery of another $1.4 billion by 1991, increasing to 100 the number of these advance fighter aircraft.

It is inconceivable that despite Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, and reduced United States-Soviet hostilities, the flow of arms to Pakistan has continued unabated. These arms ostensibly for deployment against the Soviet presence in Pakistan, have been deployed on the Indian border. History will recall a similar precursor to war. In 1965, $1.5 billion in United States military assistance to Pakistan, supposedly to deter Russian or Chinese aggression, resulted in all out war between both India and Pakistan.

With the threat of nuclear war which would embroil us all, we need a new policy in the Third World. One that seeks to unequivocally lessen regional tensions by working with the Soviet Union to immediately cut off all military supplies to nations embarking on the path of destruction.

The administration, as well as Congress, should send a clear message to both nations that war will not be tolerated, because it is contrary to everyone's interest. Our foreign policy, together with that of the Soviet Union, should emphasize the sale of plowshares rather than military hardware. The latter only strengthens the military and the voices of extremists on all sides of the fence. To strengthen democracy in the world we need a foreign policy which would support economic development and will make the voices of reason stronger than the saber rattling of the military. The United States should work hand-in-hand with other nations and world leaders to strongly encourage both India and Pakistan to put an immediate end to border hostilities, cease support of militants within each others borders, and hold bilateral negotiations based on the 1972 Simla agreement.

This agreement provides the framework for the peaceful settlement of the conflict. Under this agreement both nations agreed to "settle their differences by peaceful means through bilateral negotiations or any other means mutually agreed upon between them." It also mandated that both sides would respect the de facto boundary between the two sectors of Kashmir as arrived at in 1971. Additionally both countries pledged to "prevent the organization, assistance or encouragement of any acts detrimental to the maintenance of peaceful relations."

These two nations should also jointly begin discussions and negotiations leading to a resolution for this important conflict.

The U.S. Congress should do everything possible to facilitate this peace process.

TRIBUTE TO THOMAS DUGGAN

HON. CHESTER G. ATKINS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the occasion of Peace Officers' Memorial Day to personally recognize the service of Thomas Duggan of the Lawrence Police Department, killed in the line of duty on March 16, 1990.

When a man such as Tom Duggan is killed, the whole community suffers. This courageous man ensured, at great personal cost, that this country remained a civilized nation, based on laws, not held hostage to the threats of criminals. His career personified the ideals of the community for which he sacrificed his life.

Patrolman Duggan was appointed on July 7, 1971. It was not long before he distinguished himself, for on December 2, 1972, Thomas Duggan entered a burning building and saved the lives of three individuals incapacitated by the smoke and flames. His personnel file was filled with commendations by fellow officers and the public that he served who recognized his cool demeanor during the uniquely stressful time faced by an officer.

Tom Duggan had a unique rapport with the community. Friends and acquaintances, fellow officers and superiors, all testified to his special personality, and his friendly professionalism which diffused many potentially dangerous confrontations and created friendships where there had been only hostility. He was a true public servant to the city of Lawrence.

The life and service of Thomas Duggan was embodied by the highest ideals in which he believed. We may all take a lesson, Mr.

Speaker, from the life, service, and dedication of Thomas Duggan. We all owe him a great debt and remember him fondly this day.

HONORING THE HOMECREST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute the Homecrest Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn as it celebrates its 90th anniversary on June 14.

The Homecrest Presbyterian Church was the pioneer church of the Brooklyn community. It was organized on June 1, 1900, by the Presbytery of Brooklyn and Mr. Edward L. Tibbals, a student of the Union Theological Seminary, was placed in charge of the new work. Ordained and installed as pastor in 1901, Mr. Tibbals had a notable pastorate until his death in 1937. The cornerstone of the present building was laid on January 1, 1901, and then dedicated the Easter Sunday morning of that same year. By 1920 the membership had increased to 278 and all mortgage indebtedness was paid. In that same year, the church membership stood at 327 and the Sunday school at 273. Two years later, Reverend Tibbals died after a pastorate of 37 years. A handsome bronze tablet and a beautiful memorial window were placed in the sanctuary.

The current pastor, Rev. David Munroe Cory, Th.D., was installed on Sunday, September 18, 1960. Dr. Cory, who had graduated from New College, Edinburgh, Scotland, had come to the Presbytery in 1926, when he became pastor of the Cuyler Church in downtown Brooklyn. Following a pastorate of 29 years, Dr. Cory was called to be executive secretary of the Brooklyn Division of the Protestant Council of New York, where he served for over 5 years. Since the beginning of his work at Homecrest, 533 persons have joined the church. Dr. Cory is currently in his 64th year of continuous service as a Protestant minister and is believed to be, at the age of 87, the oldest active minister in age and in length of service.

The neighborhood of Homecrest Presbyterian Church has been in transition for many years. The membership peaked over 40 years ago but the church has successfully maintained its place in the community. Standing on a large shaded lawn, Homecrest has its doors open to new friends and new arrivals, providing a place of worship in the reformed Protestant tradition and maintaining an active Sunday school.

This fine institution has enhanced and enriched the lives of its members as well as the Brooklyn community as a whole. It is the spiritual home of dozens of Brooklyn's leaders and a beacon of comfort and hope for all.

It is with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize the Homecrest Presbyterian Church as it celebrates its 90th anniversary.

A SPECIAL THANKS TO NURSES

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of National Nursing Home Week. I would particularly like to single out the nurses, whose tireless help and commitment helps make everyone's job that much easier.

Nurses are truly the backbone of the medical profession. I know personally the time and effort expended by nurses—my wife has had a career in nursing. Nurses are the largest group of health care providers in the country. It is a specialized, exciting, and vital career. The increase in the technology and the quicker discharge rate due to DRG's, among other things, have forced nursing practices to increase sophistication and skill level.

Yet in past years, the United States has faced a critical shortage of registered nurses. Realizing the true value in nursing and that a lack of nursing staff could indeed prove life threatening, Federal legislation has been introduced to help entice young men and women to enter this all-important profession.

As we celebrate and honor National Nursing Home Week, we need to give a special thanks to those who are an integral part of this and all health care fields—the nurses.

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF NUCEA

HON. ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in order to acknowledge an important event in American higher education. On April 28, 1990, the members of the National University Continuing Education Association [NUCEA] gathered in New Orleans, LA to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the founding of the association. I take special pride in noting that the first meeting of the organization took place in Madison, WI in 1915. From the original 22 funding institutions, NUCEA has grown to nearly 400 colleages and universities dedicated to the promotion and advancement of high quality continuing higher education opportunities for the Nation's more than 5.7 million adult, part-time students at the pre- and postbaccalaureate levels.

The mission of continuing higher education is to provide lifelong access to knowledge and skills needed to assure: The ecnomic vitality of the Nation; the democratic participation of citizens; the expansion of opportunities of all people; and a population informed by diverse ideas and cultural heritages. The work of continuing higher education is inspired by a belief in the democratic principles of access and opportunity, respect for the life of the mind and the power of ideas. Continuing higher education recognizes that the growth and security of this Nation depend upon continuous exposure to knowledge and the utilization of knowledge.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege of associating with many NUCEA members working in continuing higher education. They are a special group of professionals and are to be commended for their vision and dedication to ensuring that part-time students are accorded equal access to higher education opportunties. I wish the members of NUCEA well as they continue their important work and reaffirm my support and that of this chamber for their many contributions to the Nation.

COLORADO BUSINESS LEADERS SUPPORT EDUCATION

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, Martin Marietta, U.S. West, United Banks and other Colorado businesses are sponsoring new and innovative programs to support education in the State.

Sam Lusky's May 4 Colorado Statesman column illustrates the tremendous positive force business can have in education:

BUSINESS AND EDUCATION GETTING TOGETHER

(By Sam Lusky)

What't happening to education in Colorado—or, for that matter, almost every other state in the union?

For one thing, the natives—in this case administrators, teachers, taxpayers and an occasional student—are restless.

Surveys show conclusively that education is on a downward path.

Teachers say privately that they're so loaded down with administrative flats that they don't have enough time to teach.

Administrators say teachers are more interested in sabbaticals and recognition than in spending enough time to teach.

School superintendents almost inevitably look for a fistful of new money to throw at the problem—as witness the $200 million Denver bond issue coming up next week (May 8).

All of this had had a profound effect on American business, looking for tomorrow's shining geniuses and reliable members of the workforce to emerge from the educational hodgepodge.

But it becomes readily apparent that the mere support of the business community, while important, will only assume a maximum role if guided, shaped and overseen by a combination of creative thinkers emanating from many fields.

There's also a cross-fire here of those who think students must learn the basics sans computers, as opposed to those who regard computer illiterates as total illiterates.

Enter the purveyors of the middle ground, as typified by the recently created Colorado Business and Education Council, bylaws for which were adopted in late April.

Its mission: ". . . to stimulate, support and promote business and education partnership initiatives designed to improve the quality of education in the schools of Colorado at all levels."

The Council will develop public policy recommendations for school/business cooperation among business, community, government, labor, schools, colleges and universities, teachers, parents and students.

Already in place, according to a Colorado Education Association Report issued in March 1989, are a variety of partnership programs involving a mixture of the nation's industrial giants as well as some civic-minded local companies:

Among them:

Martin Marietta sponsors a Young Assistance program which helps train up to 400 middle and junior high school math and science teachers in how to increase student interest in those subjects.

U.S. West has many programs, including an executive on loan to the Public Education Coalition, Project Edge in six Colorado schools, geared toward assisting minority students in entering high tech areas, and a Pioneer program which brings retired persons into the classroom to assist teachers.

United Banks has an Inroads program for minority student achievers and is involved in several other organizations assisting business/education partnerships.

Some product companies and retailers, like Pepsi Cola and Safeway, have direct participation in which product purchases go toward providing electronic equipment for schools.

Members of the Colorado Business and Education Council include:

The Governor's Job Training Office, the Colorado Department of Education, Colorado Association of School Boards, Colorado Community College and Occupational Educational System, the State Senate, Club 20, Colorado Education Association, Denver Classroom Teachers Association, Colorado Board of Cooperative Educational Services Association (BOCES), Colorado Association of Commerce and Industry, Colorado Association of School Executives, Association of Colorado Independent Schools, Archdiocese of Denver, Colorado Alliance for Science, Greater Denver Chamber of Commerce, Metro North Chamber of Commerce, Public Education Coalition.

Red Rocks Community College, Parks Junior College, University of Colorado, Jefferson County School District, South Central BOCES, Denver Public School District, Poudre Valley School District, Adams County BOCES and Edison School District.

US West, Kodak, IBM, Martin Marietta, TRI S, Inc., Excel Business Systems; Raul Alderete, optometrist; Charles Courtad; orthodontist, and Julie Bierbaum, business management consultant.

While business/education partnerships are a relatively new concept in terms of years, they point an obvious way to improve educational standards to the benefit of all concerned.

HIS EMINENCE TOMAS CARDINAL S. O'FIAICH, LEADER OF ALL IRELAND

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to a man who was the true leader and unifying force for all of Ireland. That man was his Eminence Tomas Cardinal S. O'Fiaich, primate of all Ireland and the 112th successor to St. Patrick. He passed away suddenly on May 8, 1990.

Cardinal O'Fiaich, who was ordained the spiritual leader to the over 4 million Catholics in Ireland in 1977, became of of the first cardinals appointed by Pope John Paul II 2 years later.

The passing of my friend Cardinal O'Fiaich has left a tremendous void in the church across Ireland and through the United States. He was the only consistent force that could end the horrible bloodshed in Northern Ireland. His spirit will not rest until Ireland is unified.

Cardinal O'Fiaich was born just north of the border in South Armagh in 1923. The youngest of three, his father was a school teacher who later became a principal. His mother died when he was 8 and his father passed away in 1964. Following elementary school he went to St. Patrick's College in Armagh and entered the national seminary at St. Patrick's College, Mayooth in 1940. In addition to the traditional seminary courses in philosophy, theology, and the scriptures, he studied Celtic history.

After a brief illness, Cardinal O'Fiaich resumed his studies for the priesthood at St. Peter's College in Wexford. He was ordained for the Armagh diocese on June 6, 1948.

As a leading scholar of the Irish language and history, Cardinal O'Fiaich wrote several journals and lectured around the world through the 1960's and 1980's. He recently led a successful fight to maintain the teaching of the Irish language in schools throughout British-occupied Northern Ireland by putting a referendum on the ballot.

One highlight of Cardinal O'Fiaich's career was a visit by Pope John Paul II to Ireland in 1979, which he helped arrange. This was the first time a Pope had ever set foot in Ireland. The cardinal, who was at his side for the entire visit, was gratified by the over 2.6 million people which saw the Pope during this visit, more than half of the country's population.

Mr. Speaker, Cardinal O'Fiaich will long be remembered throughout Ireland. He was a beloved man who embraced the masses and in return wanted only to reunite Ireland and end the bloodshed. His voice will be missed, but his vision for a united Ireland will remain as the beacon for peace and brotherhood.

MESSAGE BY EDWIN J. FEULNER, JR.

HON. RICHARD K. ARMEY

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I commend this outstanding message by Edwin J. Feulner, Jr., president of the Heritage Foundation, to my colleagues. Mr. Feulner has addressed a concern many of us share, namely that President Bush may be considering increasing revenues to reduce the deficit:

THE HERITAGE FOUNDATION,
May 11, 1990.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Press reports and statements by members of your Administration suggest that you are reconsidering your pledge to oppose tax increases. I sincerely and respectfully ask that you maintain your commitment and follow through on your promise to protect the American taxpayer and the economy from the ruinous effects of higher taxes.

In your campaign for the presidency, you eloquently stated the case for greater economic freedom and clearly explained that higher taxes would undermine economic growth, contribute to excessive federal spending, and make America less competitive. Your unadulterated and unambiguous oppostion to new taxes energized conservatives on your behalf.

Millions of Americans stand ready to join with you in a fight against higher taxes. I assure you that all of us at the Heritage Foundation are prepared to battle against a tax increase. It would be most unfortunate if we found ourselves on separate sides on this issue.

The case against higher taxes is stronger than it has ever been. Tax collections are at an all time record high. Tax freedom day this year, the date Americans stop paying taxes and get to keep the money they earn, was May 5, the latest it has ever occurred. Taxes this year have climbed to 19.6 percent of GNP, the fourth highest level in peacetime history. Incidently, the only two times taxes have exceeded 20 percent of GNP, 1969 and 1981, the economy entered a recession the following year.

Some argue that there is no way to balance the budget without higher taxes. Indeed, some members of your Administration are trying to create a crisis atmosphere in order to make a tax increase more palatable. We reject deficit-phobia. The deficit as a percent of GNP is less than half the size it was five years ago. Yes, the deficit should be reduced, but it should be done in a manner that promotes, not retards, economic growth.

Fortunately, should Congress prove unwilling to enact a pro-growth deficit reduction package, it is completely within your power to allow Gramm-Rudman's automatic sequester to restrain growth of spending and reduce the deficit to the legally required level. Once again, I can assure you that we at The Heritage Foundation will support a decision to choose a sequester over higher taxes.

I urge you to unequivocally state that you stand by your promise to reject any tax increase. You were right then; you would be right now. The economic and political consequences of abandoning your no-tax pledge are too costly.

Faithfully,

EDWIN J. FEULNER, Jr.,
President.

METROPOLITAN PHYSICIANS DIVISION OF THE UJA-FEDERATION TO HONOR TWO DISTINGUISHED MEMBERS

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, June 3, 1990, the Metropolitan Physicians Division of the UJA-Federation and the Special Operation Exodus Campaign will honor two distinguished citizens from New York, Dr. Saul Farber and Dr. Donald Gribetz.

Dr. Saul Farber, a physician noted for his warmth and concern for the welfare of his patients, is provost of the Medical Center and dean of the School of Medicine at New York University. He holds a prominent position on the New York City Mayoral Commission on AIDS, and has been appointed to the State commission of life and law. In addition to his numerous achievements in the field of medicine, Dr. Farber has been an ardent supporter of the Jewish causes. He is an advisory board member of Hadassah and a member of the board of governors of Tel Aviv University.

Dr. Donald Gribetz, the physicians division's second honoree, is a professor of pediatrics, and has been affiliated with the Mount Sinai Medical Center for 37 years. He was a founding father of the Riverdale Jewish Center, and has been active in the Russian Jewry movement. Dr. Gribetz was in the forefront of the UJA-Federation physicians campaign for over 10 years, and currently serves as chairman of the board. He remains an active and highly respected member of the Jewish and medical community.

Dr. Donald Gribetz will be the first recipient of the Robert S. Coles Memorial Award, which is given in memory of the dignified and compassionate physician from Lenox Hill Hospital whose unremitting support of UJA-Federation activities and constant dedication to excellence in his field have left an eternal mark on the Metropolitan Physicians Division and the entire field of medicine.

IN SUPPORT OF BARBARA BUSH

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I am dismayed by the recent student opposition to Barbara Bush as Wellesley College's commencement speaker. The students apparently feel that her husband's political success diminishes her own substantial accomplishments.

I find this attitude most deplorable. Undeniably, President Bush is successful. But that should in no way obscure or diminish the manifest achievements of his wife.

It is to Barbara Bush's great credit that she seized on the increased exposure as First Lady with energy and conviction. She clearly holds her own in promoting awareness of homelessness, AIDS, and illiteracy.

Mr. Speaker, Wellesley could hope for no greater role model than Mrs. Bush, who very successfully balances the demands of public and family life.

In this body, we often hear similar criticisms of our own spouses—that their success should be held in lower esteem because we serve in Congress. We know that nothing could be further from the truth.

I hope the students of Wellesley listen very carefully to Barbara Bush. Young graduates still have much to learn, and Mrs. Bush has a great deal to share with them.

TRIBUTE TO THE REPUBLIC OF CAPE VERDE

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor and pleasure to rise today and pay tribute to the Republic of Cape Verde and Cape Verdeans throughout the world. July 5, 1990 marks the 15th anniversary of this proud country's independence from Portugal and it will be celebrated by Cape Verdeans worldwide.

After an almost 20-year struggle for improved economic, social, and political conditions, on July 5, 1975, under the leadership of revolutionary Amilcar Cabral, the Republic of Cape Verde emerged a country with strong economic aspirations and a commitment to the continuance of a fair and equitable society.

Located approximately 385 miles off the west African coast, this 10 island archipelago is developing into a key center for regional and international investment. The country's monetary and fiscal policies have made this young nation a showcase for the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. Cape Verde's GNP has doubled since independence and it currently boasts an average annual growth rate of 4 percent. The country is becoming a significant development resource for its neighbors and is an innovative partner in regional development.

Cape Verdeans take extreme pride in Cape Verdean Ambassador Jose Fernandes Luis Lopes, the first African ever to attain the distinguished position of head of the diplomatic corps in Washington.

The official language of Cape Verde is Portuguese, but most of the population speak a Crioulo dialect. The rich Crioulo musical and poetic tradition is filled with old fashioned stories of love, exotic journeys, and family.

In the mid-19th century, Cape Verdeans were renowned for being a great seafaring people, skilled in whaling and craftsmanship in the repair of ships. As a result, many Cape Verdeans eventually settled in different parts of the world.

Of the more than 3 million people of Cape Verdean ancestry worldwide, over 400,000 live in the United States. I take special pride in the achievements of Cape Verdean Americans in my district, particularly since one of my own staff assistants—Margaret Mott—is an active and enthusiastic organizer among Californian Cape Verdean Americans.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I ask my colleagues, who have many Cape Verdean Americans in their respective congressional districts, to join me in saluting the Republic of Cape Verde on this auspicious occasion.

THE SOLAR, WIND, AND GEOTHERMAL POWER PRODUCTION INCENTIVES ACT OF 1990

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to be coauthor with Mr. SHARP of the Solar, Wind, and Geothermal Power Production Incentives Act of 1990. This important legislation will remove a major obstacle to the development of cost-effective and technologically innovative renewable energy technologies: the size limitations on projects instituted in the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 [PURPA].

PURPA has played a major role in spurring the formation of independently developed power projects that utilize renewable energy sources such as solar, wind, and geothermal energy. Facilities that qualify under PURPA's rules are not subject to provisions designed for regulating traditional utility projects found in the Federal Power Act and the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935.

PURPA has been extremely successful in increasing the utilization of renewable resources and lowering the price of power generated from these sources. For example, solar thermal power has dropped from a production cost of 24 cents per kilowatthour [kwh] in 1984 to a cost of about 8 cents per kwh today. Wind and geothermal power production costs have also decreased thanks to PURPA, down to about 7 to 9 cents per kwh and 5 cents per kwh, respectively.

But renewable facilities that seek qualifying status under PURPA have been limited in size to 30 megawatts per project—a size limit that may have seemed large with respect to 1978 technologies when the law was passed, but that is now preventing significant economies of scale. Luz International, the developer of solar energy generating systems in southern California, has estimated that its next generation of solar power technology can reduce their production costs from 8 to 6 cents per kwh if the size limit in PURPA is removed. Similar economies of scale exist for geothermal and wind power, once Federal law allows their projects to grow in size.

The importance of this incentive for clean renewable energy is underscored this year by the imminent passage of the Clean Air Act reauthorization with its goal of cutting in half emissions of sulfur dioxide and other acid rain-forming pollutants. Renewable energy can play a major role in meeting our clean air goals while providing reliable and affordable electricity—but only if the right incentives are put in place and inappropriate barriers to growth are removed.

Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleague, Mr. SHARP, the distinguished chairman of the Energy and Power Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee, a subcommittee on which I have the honor of serving, for his leadership in this and other energy issues. I look forward to working with him, Chairman DINGELL, and other colleagues in quickly passing the Solar, Wind, and Geothermal Power Production Incentives Act of 1990.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. JOHN WILDE

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention today a most distinguished educator, Dr. John Wilde of Yucaipa, CA. Dr. Wilde, who has served as superintendent of the Yucaipa Joint Unified School District for the last 15 years, is retiring in June after many years as an educator and, more importantly, a shining example of public service to the community.

Dr. Wilde graduated from the University of Redlands with a degree in psychology in 1952, and received his master of arts degree in industrial psychology 2 years later. In 1973, Wilde completed his PhD. work in education at the Claremont Graduate School.

Dr. Wilde's professional work in education began in 1952, as a research assistant in the San Bernardino City Unified School District and several years later, as guidance consultant for the San Bernardino County Schools. In the ensuing years, he pursued positions through the Yucaipa Joint Unified School District with advancing degrees of responsibility. Dr. Wilde served as director of pupil personnel services from 1963 to 1972, principal of the continuation high school in 1972, assistant superintendent for educational services from 1972 to 1975, and as district superintendent from 1975 until the present day.

Dr. Wilde's long tenure as district superintendent has been marked by excellence. In that time, the school district has been recognized for consistently high test scores on both the CAP and CTBS achievement tests. The Valley Elementary and Yucaipa Middle Schools have been designated as distinguished schools by the California State Department of Education. The Green Valley Continuation School has been the recipient of the California School Board Golden Bell Award. The high school forensics team has received national attention and recognition for many years. All of these notable achievements occurred during Dr. Wilde's tenure indicating his high standard of excellence for the entire school system.

In addition, Dr. Wilde has served as a teacher, administrator, and counselor in the Bloomington School District, at the University of Redlands, and at the University of California, Riverside. He has a life diploma in pupil personnel services; life credentials in general teaching and general school services, K-14; and is licensed as both an educational psychologist and a marriage, family, and child counselor.

Mr. Speaker, please join me today in recognizing the outstanding contributions of Dr. John Wilde to future generations through his many years of service to the Yucaipa Joint Unified School District. His contributions to society through community service and years of work as an educator is an inspiration certainly worthy of recognition by the House of Representatives.

NATIONAL PEACE OFFICERS' MEMORIAL DAY

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, this week is National Police Week and today is Peace Officers's Memorial Day. I am proud to honor our country's police officers. Their commitment to peace, to the rules of law and society, and to the welfare of all people is made known by their dedication, duty, and deeds.

Police officers do not debate or make laws like politicans. They do not all study laws in a remote setting like lawyers or scholars. They are with us—every hour, every day, every night—in our neighborhoods and on our streets, doing the hard, dangerous, and sometime tedious job of protecting us and trying to make our legal system work.

Whenever a police officer dies in the line of duty, a whole society mourns for the lost officer, the family, and for the community itself. The willingness to sacrifice one's own life to protect others is the most ennobling of all human traits and deserves our country's highest honor. But let us not forget that these deaths are still a great tragedy for the friends, family, and neighbors of the slain.

The deaths of police offices in our country occurs far too often. It is our duty as legislators to do all we can to protect those who protect us. One way we can do this is to enact laws that make it more difficult for dangerous criminals to be out on our streets with guns in their hands.

I am fed up with the drug-related gun violence that plagues every community in America. The Federal Government cannot continue a policy that has left the Nation's law enforcement officials outgunned by criminals. To combat crime, the Nation needs better enforcement and conviction of criminals. It must be coupled with a no parole policy for convicted killers, drug traffickers, and other dangerous criminals.

Every major law enforcement organization in the nation favors the provisions of the Brady bill which would establish a 7-day waiting period for handgun purchases. This would allow law enforcement officials to check for purchasers who are criminal and, therefore, ineligible under current law to own a handgun. It would also prevent handguns from being bought by the mentally ill or minors.

Michigan has a background check requirement which includes a natural waiting period. In fact, some 22 States have waiting periods for handguns or require background checks. The Brady bill would not change the law in Michigan, but it would thwart Michigan criminals who buy their guns in another State to avoid the background check.

Mr. Speaker, our country's police officers merit our highest praise and gratitude for the hard work they do. They also deserve our keen attention to their recommendations about ways to protect society. We could give them no higher honor than to rededicate ourselves to the fight against crime, illegal drug trafficking, and gun violence.

CELEBRATING THE VIRGINIA OPERA

HON. OWEN B. PICKETT

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with my colleagues the achievements of the Virginia Opera, which, I am proud to say makes its home in Norfolk, which is located in my district.

In the 15 years since its creation, the Virginia Opera has had many successes to celebrate. Under the experienced and innovative leadership of General Director Peter Mark, the opera has staged numerous productions that have received international recognition. It has also discovered and trained several of America's best young artists, who have later performed internationally on many of the world's most famous opera stages.

More important still, the opera has shown what a positive influence the creative arts can be to a community, even to a State. The opera has been a source of pride for residents of the Second Congressional District and for the Commonwealth as a whole, especially when they see the New York Times call it "the tops by any standard." NBC Nightly News has also praised the Virginia Opera as "one of the Nation's very best regional companies."

Critical acclaim from near and far for its dramatic productions has not stopped the Virginia Opera from taking the time and effort to help the community through education and outreach programs. The opera maintains an array of imaginative programs for audiences of all ages. Last season, over 102,000 adults and children participated in at least one of the many programs offered by the opera.

The opera has also helped the community by making Norfolk and the surrounding areas an appealing place for businesses to settle. Businesses come to the area in part because they know that the vibrant artistic atmosphere is attractive to their employees.

The artistic vitality and community spirit of the Virginia Opera are complemented by the sound fiscal management of its directors. Through their active work and dedication, the Virginia opera has gone from a $33,000 pilot project to a $2.3 million success story.

A TRIBUTE TO THE PEEKSKILL AREA HEALTH CENTER

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, for the last 15 years, the Peekskill Area Health Center in Peekskill, Westchester County, NY has provided essential medical care to thousands of medically needy families living in the Hudson Valley region of New York State. The community should be commended for having the vision, dedication, and the faith to develop such an outstanding community health center.

It was many years ago, in 1971, when the health center was only a gleam in the community's eye. From that point forward, the struggles have been many. Some of the historic moments I have been involved in include releasing the impounded regional medical program funds so the center could open its doors; designating the Peekskill area a medically underserved location and the creation of a network of four community health centers in Westchester County.

I recall having Mrs. Jeannette Phillips, who was then the chairwoman of the board of directors, come to Washington to meet with the National Association of Community Health Centers and myself to discuss all the medical needs of the community. She convinced everyone that this community deserved Federal funds. She still comes every year to remind me of the fact.

In 1977, when Anne Nolon came on board, she, Jeannette, and I convinced Dr. Edward Martin of the Bureau of Health Care Delivery Assistance that there were pockets of poverty in Westchester and this community health center deserved U.S. Department of Health and Human Services funding.

Each year, executive director Anne Nolon, associate director Jeannette Phillips, board chairman Alan Steiner and members Margarita Isputiew, Edna Lee, and Alan Levy come to Washington and brief me on local health care needs. And believe me, I respond.

From that first $33,000 Health and Human Services seed grant to a million dollars of annual Federal support, the program has grown in leaps and bounds. Patients have flocked to the doors, numbering 500 in 1975, and 15,000 in 1990. Staff has grown from 12 to 150 full- and part-time medical, dental, and ancillary support personnel.

The van, supported through the Stewart B. McKinney Act Health Care for the Homeless Program, travels to isolated neighborhoods to provide health care services to the 1,000 homeless living in motels and transitional housing. In addition, a satellite recently opened in February in the nearby city of Beacon, extending health care to the medically needy there.

The newest venture is a migrant health program that will serve 7,000 migrants residing in the Hudson Valley region. Future plans will focus on the desperate needs of children in poverty through the development of a Pediatric and Adolescent Treatment Center.

As you can see, the Peekskill Area Health Center cares. It cares about the community and its people. It cares about the homeless, drug addicts, alcoholics, AIDS victims, the elderly, and our children in crisis.

On May 18, in Peekskill, the NAACP will honor the Peekskill Area Health Center. The NAACP could not have chosen a better organization to recognize. I salute the Peekskill Area Health Center for its many years of selfless service to the community and wish the directors of the center the best of luck in the future.

ARTS, HUMANITIES AND MUSEUMS AMENDMENTS OF 1990

HON. PAT WILLIAMS

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education, I am today introducing the Arts, Humanities and Museums Amendments of 1990, a bill to reauthorize the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Institute of Museum Services. This is President Bush's proposal. It is his reauthorization suggestion for the three agencies which represent this Government's primary support for the enhancement of our Nation's cultural life.

This bill makes few changes in current law and represents the administration's faith in the effort set into place a quarter of a century ago. It is an affirmation of faith in the principle that private citizens should make decisions about public support of the arts and humanities. It is an affirmation of the overall record of these agencies in their work to enlarge and enhance the cultural life of our Nation. It is a faith I share.

In considering this proposal, we may find that there are ways in which we can improve the system by which these decisions are made, and we may find other ways to enhance the operations of the agencies. As we prepare to mark up this bill, all of us remain open to suggestions for improving upon this basic proposal.

Nevertheless, I am pleased today to introduce the President's bill to reauthorize the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities and the Institute of Museum Services. I intend to use this bill as the basis for our reauthorization efforts. I commend the President and those whom he has appointed to direct these agencies for their steadfast leadership during this most difficult and chilling time.

A TRIBUTE TO CAMP SUNSHINE

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues the good work of Camp Sunshine in Georgia. Camp Sunshine is a camp for children with cancer, and it has served the youth of Georgia for almost a decade. This camp is like no other. Camp Sunshine provides an opportunity for children with cancer to get away from the everyday anxiety and stress that most children, indeed most adults, will never know. This camp is an experience which these children eagerly anticipate each year. It is a bright ray or hope in lives that could easily be clouded by the overwhelming realities of the physical and emotional challenge to overcome hopelessness.

But Camp Sunshine is a special place. A visit to this camp would convince you that these young campers have a unique appreciation of the joy of living. Swimming, horseback riding, singing, crafts, games, and many other traditional camp activities are pursued with enthusiasm that can be matched nowhere else. Other than the summer camp, Camp Sunshine provides activities throughout the year.

Recently I met with a group of Camp Sunshine kids visiting the Capitol. These young people were seeing this great city, as they are seeing life itself, with an attitude of wonderment and curiosity that is contagious. I eagerly look forward to the annual visit of Camp Sunshine. This year's visitors were: Trent Aldredge, Ryan Bacon, Dee Jay Beck, Bryan Bridges, David Bryant, Dan Crockett, DeAnna Drain, Barbara Griffin, Kristin Groom, Holly Hendrix, Andres Jimenez, David Kenemer, John Kimsey, Wendell Long, Marcus Missavage, Robrico Phillips, Ramon Scott, Karl Smart, Stephanie Taylor, Fukima Tigner, Molly Wheatley, Neil White, and Dixie Yandle.

The women and men who make this camp a reality are not well known, but they are heroes to the children and their families. I commend the cochairman of Camp Sunshine's board, Dorothy H. Jordan and William B. Schwartz, Jr., and the entire board of directors as well as the officers: William B. Schwartz III, Mary Beth Fain, Mo Thrash, Thomas Beard, and executive director Sally Hale.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I want to include the following lines from Camp Sunshine's 1989 publication, Sunny Daze:

Camp Sunshine is a place filled with kind words, reassuring hugs and warm smiles. Where the pain you've known and the conflict you've experienced give you strength to walk through life facing each new situation with courage and optimism. A place where the lives you have touched and those that have touched yours are always a part of you. An experience that leaves you somehow better.

PEACE OFFICERS MEMORIAL DAY

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, May 13 through May 19 is National Police Week and today is Peace Officers Memorial Day. As you know, Congress is asked on a daily basis to approve and promote commemorative days for any number of special reasons. While many of the professions and occasions we are asked to remember are truly worthy of the honor, it would be hard to find a group more worthy of note than the peace officers who put their lives on the line every day.

I have learned first hand how quiet, suburban communities such as those I am privileged to represent, are being infiltrated by the violence and destruction of drugs, gangs, and automatic weapons. One might expect organized violence in the large urban cities in our country, but the drug trade and gang violence have moved to center stage for most law enforcement officers no matter where in our country they work.

To set aside a day to honor those who have died in the line of duty, and to honor their fellow officers with a national week of recognition is both fitting and necessary. It goes without saying that we owe these officers a great deal of gratitude. In addition to the nice words we will say about them this week, we also need to drive home the point that these men and women in uniform are facing increased dangers in the street. Their jobs call on them to confront criminals who are well-financed, well-armed, and willing to fight and die to protect their careers as drug lords, gang leaders, and pushers. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing our police officers well by voting for laws to make their jobs easier and to make fighting the war on drugs safer and more effective. We owe these men and women more than a commemorative—we owe them our unbridled support.

The list of slain officers for just the State of California is 15 pages long. This is a grim reminder of the real price of fighting crime. I would like to add a personal salute to the officers of the Inland Empire who have given their lives in the line of duty. Their names are listed below. I would like to extend my gratitude and condolences to the families of these officers. These police families have paid the ultimate price for making our lives a little safer:

Sgt. Gary W. Wolfley, Rialto Police Department.

Officer Leonard A. Christiansen, Riverside Police Department.

Patrol Officer Dennis C. Doty, Riverside Police Department.

Officer Paul C. Teel, Riverside Police Department.

Patrol Officer Philip N. Trust, Riverside Police Department.

Patrolman Larry E. Walters, Riverside Police Department.

Sgt. Timothy F. Littlefield, San Bernardino Police Department.

A SALUTE TO MRS. JULIA NEWMAN

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, as you know, May is National Senior Citizen Month. May also marks the beginning of our Annual Congressional Senior Citizen Intern Program which is being held May 13–19, 1990. Seniors from around the Nation are gathered on Capitol Hill this week for a firsthand look at the shaping of public policy and the legislative process. Since the program's inception in 1973, Senior Citizen interns have benefited from behind-the-scenes seminars, workshops and meetings with Members of Congress and administration officials on issues affecting older Americans and our Nation. I am proud to take this opportunity to salute an outstanding senior from my congressional district who is serving as my Senior Citizen Intern for 1990, Mrs. Julia Newman.

Mrs. Newman was born in Birmingham, AL, and moved to Cleveland at a very early age. She began a long and distinguished career as an educator in 1956, teaching at both Giddings and Observation Elementary Schools in Cleveland. In 1967, she began working for the Cleveland Public Schools Support Services Office as assistant project manager. Two years later, she was named project manager of Child Development Services. Mrs. Newman continues her role as an educator, currently serving as a counselor for students and teachers.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Newman resides in Shaker Heights and is an active member of the community. She holds memberships in the Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Shaker Heights League of Women Voters, Northeast Ohio Mental Health Assocation, and the Ohio Association of Elementary Supervisors and Principals. Mrs. Newman is the recipient of numerous awards and citations which recognize her commitment to education and our youth. She is also the mother of two children: Kathy Newman, an instructor at Grambling State University; and Maurice Newman, a media specialist in Shaker Heights.

Mrs. Newman believes that children are our most important resource. Her philosophy as a teacher and counselor is, "If we commit our energy, time and resources to our children today, we build a better world for tomorrow."

Mr. Speaker, I hope that my colleagues will join me in saluting Mrs. Newman—an outstanding senior and a remarkable individual. It is an honor to have her serve as my Congressional Senior Citizen Intern for 1990.

SUPPORT FOR H.R. 2273, THE AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in firm, enthusiastic support of H.R. 2273, the Americans with Disabilities Act. The Americans with Disabilities Act is a monumental piece of civil rights legislation which provides long-overdue protections for disabled Americans enabling them to participate more fully in mainstream American society. The ADA prohibits discrimination against individuals with disabilities in private sector employment, all public services and accommodations, transportation, and telecommunications systems. Significantly, the Americans with Disabilities Act is patterned after section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 which has always included people with AIDS and HIV infection among those protected against discrimination on the basis of disability.

This bill has been considered by 4 separate committees, which have held 11 different hearings, and it has been through 7 different full committee and subcommittee markups. From the very outset, the spirit and intent of this legislation have received near-universal support. Yet, many have expressed the concern that the Americans with Disabilities Act might require private businesses to implement services and/or accommodations which are financially or practically unfeasible. These fears have been matched by the concerns of those who have worried aloud that bowing to the wishes of private enterprise would strip the legislation of its potency. Both of these sets of fears have been seriously considered in hearings and in committee discussions.

I feel strongly that the bill which has emerged from the committees and which comes before the House tomorrow preserves the heart and soul of the original ADA. H.R. 2273 will effectively secure for disabled Americans the right to contribute and compete on a level playing field with other Americans. At the same time, I believe it will prove sensitive to the concerns of private enterprise. Businesses will not go broke complying with the provisions of this bill.

We have already seen the ADA pass the Senate by an overwhelming margin. I would urge the House to follow suit. I am a proud cosponsor of the Americans with Disabilities Act and will support the ADA when it reaches the floor tomorrow for consideration by the full House.

A TRIBUTE TO HAROLD L. MOE

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask that my colleagues join me in paying tribute to Mr. Harold L. Moe, teacher, mentor, and friend to many a constituent who have traversed the halls of Rowland Unified School District schools.

Harold Moe will be completing 31 years of dedicated and faithful service to public education as a teacher and administrator on June 16, 1990.

His first teaching assignment was in a junior high school in Havre, MT. During this year, he was recruited by the Rowland district in the fall of 1959. Harold taught grades two through six at three different elementary schools. He became an administrative intern at Villacorta Elementary School after 4 years in the classroom.

Following his year as an intern, Harold became principal of Villacorta School and remained there for three additional years. In the fall of 1967, he became principal at Fajardo School where he remained for 8 years. Following his tour at Fajardo School, Harold transferred to Ybarra School where he served as principal for 6 years until the spring of 1981. Harold took the helm at Oswalt Elementary in the fall of 1983, and remained there until the present.

As well as a principal, Harold has also given of his time as an elected officer in both teacher and administrative associations. He organized and implemented a districtwide civil defense plan while serving as administrative intern. Harold proudly holds lifetime memberships in NEA, CTA, and PTA.

There is no doubt in my mind that Harold L. Moe will be missed by his students, his friends, his colleagues. He was a master teacher and administrator who set high standards for his students and colleagues. Congratulations and a warm thank you are due to Harold for his years of dedication.

Harold L. Moe was born and raised in the northeastern part of North Dakota. He attended Northern Montana College and obtained a bachelor of science degree in secondary education with a major in social studies and a minor in biological science.

Harold and his wife, Lois Ann, will celebrate their 36th anniversary on July 3, 1990. They are the proud parents of four children and grandparents to two.

AIRCRAFT NOISE A MAJOR ENVIRONMENTAL HEADACHE

HON. JOHN MILLER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, aircraft noise has become a major environmental headache in hundreds of communities across the United States. While the Federal Aviation Administration has been effective in implementing air route changes in order to mitigate capacity and efficiency problems, these changes are often made at the expense of the quality of life of those communities surrounding an airport, or underneath a newly imposed flight path.

In some instances, like in Seattle, WA, local community representatives have joined the FAA and the airport authority in efforts to mitigate aircraft noise. Sometimes these local efforts achieve some success; other times not. And sometimes there are no such efforts at all.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come for aircraft noise to be addressed in a comprehensive way at the Federal level. So today I am introducing the Aviation Noise Abatement Policy Act of 1990. My bill requires the FAA Administrator to evaluate aircraft noise on impacted communities when considering significant air route changes. By doing so, noise abatement would be given equal consideration with capacity and efficiency, but safety would continue to come first. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

A SALUTE TO JOE GIBBS

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague, Representative STAN PARRIS, of the Eighth District of Virginia, we would like to bring to your attention the Northern Virginia Community Foundation's Founders Award. On June 8, 1990, this award will be presented to Joe Gibbs, head coach of the Washington Redskins and resident of Vienna, VA, at a dinner at the Sheraton Premiere in Tysons Corner, VA.

The Northern Virginia Community Foundation was formed in 1978 by a group of northern Virginia residents who wanted to return to the community some of the riches that they had received from it. Five areas of concern benefit from the foundation's endowment funds: the arts, education, health, youth, and civic improvement.

The foundation receives charitable gifts from people from all walks of life with all levels of income—families, business, national corporations, and foundations. Donations are used exclusively to benefit northern Virginia.

Each year, the foundation honors a citizen of northern Virginia who has made an unusual contribution to the life and prosperity of the community. The award is made to recognize the unselfish efforts of that individual and to promote awareness of the significance of individual action in improving the quality of life for all members of the community.

This year, Joe Gibbs, head coach of the Washington Redskins, has been chosen to receive the 1990 Founders Award. Though best known for his accomplishments with the Redskins, since coming to the Washington area in 1981, Joe Gibbs' leadership and influence have also been strongly felt off the football field.

Already the winningest coach in Redskins history and one of only 19 NFL coaches to ever register 100 victories, Joe Gibbs has proven himself as among the best coaches in professional football. In addition to his 102 coaching victories, Joe Gibbs has led the Redskins to three Super Bowl games and two Super Bowl titles, three NFC Championships, four division titles, and five playoff appearances.

Unknown to most, though, is Joe Gibbs' dedication to working with disadvantaged youth. He has devoted much of his personal time helping young people who need a special hand of friendship and direction. His concern for youth in this area began in 1982. While the rest of the league was on strike, Joe Gibbs was spending his time with troubled youth in the District of Columbia. Following this experience, Coach Gibbs made a deep, personal commitment to give disadvantaged youths a second chance and give them the moral, educational and social tools they need to become productive members of society. As a result, in 1986 he founded Youth for Tomorrow [YFT].

Youth for Tomorrow serves young boys who have trouble with drug and alcohol abuse. YFT provides a counseling and educational program in a Christian environment with graduates matriculating to college, the military, the work force or back to their natural parents. Currently, 30 boys are enrolled as residents in the YFT program. Professional counselors and a teaching faculty provide personal direction, spiritual guidance and educational opportunity. Six boys have graduated from YFT and three are enrolled in college. Ten other boys were able to return to their natural parents upon successful completion of the program.

While devoting his professional life to helping talented young men to reach their highest potential on the football field, Joe Gibbs devotes much of his personal life to helping disadvantaged youth reach their potential. In 1989, he founded Joe Gibbs Charities Foundation to help broaden community support for Youth for Tomorrow and other Christian or youth related charities.

Recognized as one of the premier coaches in professional sports, Joe Gibbs is also dedicated to helping the disadvantaged. His efforts have brought a greater awareness of how the lack of a positive environment can cause the waste of valuable lives. He has worked hard to provide an alternative for young people who have started down the wrong paths in life. Through his work he is enriching the lives of many citizens and encouraging us all to reach out and lend a helping hand.

Joe Gibbs is a uniquely deserving recipient of the Northern Virginia Community Foundation's Founders Award.

SALUTE TO MR. ED NICKS OF HUNTSVILLE, AL

HON. RONNIE G. FLIPPO

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to honor Mr. Ed Nicks of Huntsville, AL. Ed will soon retire from Rockwell International following a career that has spanned the history of our Nation's manned space flight program.

Since 1962, Ed has actively participated in the development of the Saturn/Apollo, space shuttle, and space station programs. Ed's contributions to our Nation are immeasurable. His leadership, management skills and technical expertise have been instrumental in the successful development and implementation of these respective NASA programs.

Ed is well known in the business community for his contributions and has been recognized by NASA as a recipient of their Public Service Award, Apollo and Skylab Achievement Awards, and Shuttle Appreciation Award. His efforts, though, are not limited to our space program. The National Management Association has awarded Ed with their Silver Knight of Management Commendation and in 1985 he was recognized by the Alabama State Senate with a commendation for his Outstanding Professional Achievement and Community Involvement.

While pursuing a successful career, Ed has also tirelessly devoted his time and energy to serving the people in the north Alabama area. Ed is active in Junior Achievement, the Alabama Space and Rocket Museum Science Advisory Committee, the Hospital Foundation Board and the Huntsville Museum of Art.

I know that Ed's colleagues will miss his leadership and skills but even though he is retiring from business he will continue to give of himself to his community and country in the years ahead.

It is an honor for me to share with you a profile of this very special Alabamian.

WIPP LAND WITHDRAWAL LEGISLATION

HON. JOHN M. SPRATT, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today, by request, a bill to withdraw land from public use in Eddy County, NM, for the waste isolation pilot plant [WIPP]. This bill was prepared by the Department of Energy and is being introduced at their request. The bill would withdraw land for disposal of transuranic waste created in the production of nuclear weapons. The waste would be placed in a deep-bedded salt repository. Jurisdiction over the land would be transferred from the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of Energy. Land withdrawal could be accomplished by administrative procedures, but the Department of Energy has chosen to seek legislative approval because of the controversial nature of radioactive waste disposal.

This bill sets specific preconditions for withdrawal. The land described in the bill cannot be withdrawn until the Secretary of Energy notifies the Congress:

First, that a final safety analysis report on WIPP has been approved by the Secretary;

Second, that the Department has issued a record of decisions on the supplemental environmental impact statement on the test-phase activities of the WIPP project; and Third, that a no-migration variance has been granted by the Environmental Protection Agency for the test phase.

The Secretary of Energy must develop a performance assessment plan in consultation with the National Academy of Sciences, the Environmental Protection Agency, the State of New Mexico and the Environmental Evaluation Group to guide the test activities and demonstrate compliance with applicable EPA standards for final disposal of transuranic waste.

I share the Department's view that WIPP land withdrawal should be accomplished through legislation; however, I believe significant changes will need to be made to this bill before it can be enacted. Thus I am introducing this bill by request today simply to get the process going. We need a waste disposal site for transuranic waste, but we must be certain that the repository is properly tested and proven safe, and that controls are in place to ensure safety of the site for generations to come.

During a hearing held by the House Energy and Commerce and Interior Committees, a host of issues were raised which will have to be addressed either in the land withdrawal bill or before it is passed. For example, our colleague, Mr. SKEEN from New Mexico, in whose district WIPP is located, raised a question as to why there are no provisions in this bill limiting the site to transuranic waste disposal, and specifically barring disposal of high-level radioactive waste. While the Department of Energy has stated that WIPP would not be used for high-level radioactive waste disposal, Congress should answer the question and make the guaranty explicit by writing it into the withdrawal legislation.

Many of the issues raised during the hearing to the regulatory requirements and oversight that would apply to WIPP. In 1987, the U.S. Court of Appeals struck down regulations governing disposal of transuranic and high-level wastes. EPA has not promulgated new regulations in the 3 years since the court struck down its first draft. Thus there is no clear guidance for the Department of Energy to follow in the final disposal of transuranic waste at WIPP, and there seems to be little certainty about when these regulations will be promulgated again. Another question is whether the Department of Energy should be responsible for ensuring that WIPP complies with regulations or whether EPA or some other regulatory agency should license and regulate WIPP.

During the joint hearing on WIPP, Mr. RICHARDSON, our colleague from New Mexico, asked witnesses whether WIPP should meet final disposal regulations rather than storage standards before any waste is emplaced at WIPP, even for testing. The Department of Energy argues that it cannot demonstrate compliance with the final storage regulations without emplacing some waste in the underground cavern, and that the waste stored at WIPP for testing will be retrievable and can be removed if the site fails the tests. Others contend, however, that testing for gas build-up in the waste drums can be done in the laboratory, and that, once waste is emplaced in the cavern, it will be nearly impossible to move it out.

In addition to leaving certain regulatory concerns unanswered, the bill proposed by the Department fails to set specific limits on the amount of waste to be emplaced at WIPP during the test phase. Such a limit was an essential element of legislation introduced earlier by members of the New Mexico delegation. I understand the need for flexibility during the test phase, but specific limits may need to be set in law for waste to be stored at WIPP for test purposes.

Finally, there is the issue of monetary assistance to the State of New Mexico. Congress has already authorized $100 million for construction of highways to support transportation of transuranic waste to WIPP, $43 million of which is contingent upon final approval of land withdrawal legislation. This bill contains an authorization for payments in lieu of taxes for the facility, but does not contain any additional authorization for roads in New Mexico. In August 1987, the Department of Energy signed an agreement with the State of New Mexico, committing itself to make good-faith efforts to seek $190 million from the Federal Government to build and improve roads and bridges over which TRUPAC container trucks will travel to WIPP. Mr. SKEEN and Mr. RICHARDSON insist that this agreement is integral to their State's commitment to accept WIPP. However, questions were raised at the hearing regarding the need for this $190 million, given the relatively low number of truckloads per year coming into New Mexico—about 1,000 truck trips per year—during full operation of WIPP. On the other hand, the State of New Mexico has been willing to host this disposal site when other States have demurred.

In summary, I am pleased to submit this WIPP land withdrawal legislation for the Department of Energy, because the disposal of transuranic waste is a pressing problem, and we must deal with it. But I foresee a long process of negotiation before this bill is enacted.

G. LOUISE VOSS—6 YEARS OF FINE SERVICE

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor that I pay tribute to a constituent of mine who has dedicated the past 6 years of her life as a servant to the people of the town of Wilbraham, MA.

Mrs. G. Louise Voss, wife and mother of four, as well as a grandmother, began her service as a town selectwoman 6 years ago. Her tenure was one marked with distinction and direction which soon led her to the honorable position of chairwoman of the board of selectmen in the town of Wilbraham, MA. During her 2 years as head of the board, Mrs. Voss displayed an admirable style of insightful leadership and tough decisionmaking. Her diverse knowledge of issues provided sure and steady guidance for the board members and people in her community. It is through Mrs. Voss' effective and efficient style of governing that people of Wilbraham can continue to enjoy a satisfying and harmonious residency.

Mr. Speaker, I call Mrs. Voss' achievements to the attention of my fellow colleagues and ask them to join me in congratulating her for the fine leadership and dedication she has given the people of Wilbraham. As a former city councilor, I realize how difficult and often thankless this job can be. It is for this reason that I am able to appreciate Mrs. Voss' manner of public administration. I am sure her years of service will inspire those who have had the privilege to work with her. I wish her only the best in her future endeavors and thank her for her fine service.

TRIBUTE TO MARGARET LEENEN AND MICHAEL PALM: TEXAS STATE WINNERS OF THE DISCOVER EARLY AMERICA MAP PROGRAM

HON. GREG LAUGHLIN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize two talented students from the 14th District of Texas who competed and won first place honors at the State level competition of the Discover Early America Map Program.

Margaret Leenen and Michael Palm are seniors at Sealy High School in Sealy, TX, and their map depicted significant historical events and geographical locations throughout the Thirteen Colonies of early America.

These students wanted to make their map different from the traditional American Revolution idea so they focused on the Indian conflicts. They sought to make a map that was characteristic of that time period, and they achieved this through their detailed illustrations.

I am pleased to say that this year, three schools from my district have competed in State and national competitions and have attained award-winning recognition. These two students are only one example of the talent we have in our future leaders.

TAX FREEDOM DAY

HON. CASS BALLENGER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, each year, "Tax Freedom Day" falls later and later, reflecting the rising burden of government on the American worker. This means the average American worked 125 days—from January 1, 1990 to May 5, 1990—to pay his or her Federal, State, and local taxes. Put in another light, this equals 2 hours and 45 minutes of an 8-hour work day spent working just to pay taxes.

What hurts most is that while the tax burden on the American worker continues to rise, so does the Federal deficit. The growing deficit coupled with demands for new and expanded programs will likely increase the tax burden. In fact, this week the President and congressional negotiators are discussing the possibility of raising taxes. If this happens, you can certainly bet that tax freedom day will continue to fall later on our calendars in coming years.

I am a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 558 that recognizes May 5, 1990, as National Tax Freedom Day. I want to let American taxpayers know how long they work to satisfy the tax collector.

HONORING AMERICA'S SCHOOLBUS DRIVERS

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a group of men and women who play a critical role in the daily lives of our Nation's children. America's schoolbus drivers are not often singled out for praise. Yet every day they are responsible for transporting hundreds of children to and from school and, as demonstrated by the outstanding safety record of the National School Bus Service, have done so with skill and care.

I am pleased that busdrivers are being honored May 14-18, which has been designated as "National Driver Appreciation Week," and would like to express my personal gratitude. In particular, I would like to give special thanks to the National School Bus Service's team of professional drivers in the greater Rochester community, who have assumed responsibility for the safe transportation of approximately 20,000 students, in buses, vans, and other types of specialized vehicles.

Clearly, driving involves tremendous risk. With this in mind, each day that our children arrive to and from school safely, we should think of our local busdriver and say "thanks."

IN RECOGNITION OF THE FORT MYERS NEWS-PRESS

HON. PORTER J. GOSS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Fort Myers News-Press for its award-winning series on blacks in southwest Florida, entitled "Far From the Dream."

This week members of the newspaper's staff are in Washington to receive the grand prize in the 22d annual Robert F. Kennedy Journalism Awards. It is an honor that is well-deserved.

The year-long series told a moving and extremely educational story of the history of black people in southwest Florida and the problems they face in all areas of their daily lives.

Through clear, creative prose and vivid photographs, the series captured the essence of the triumphs and the unique troubles of black life in our area.

"Far From the Dream" was a team project, worked on by a large portion of the News-Press staff. Their efforts to look beyond the surface, to reach out to members of the community and to bring about positive change through understanding deserve our praise and our thanks.

In the words of Renee Poussaint, chairwoman of the awards committee, "The staff of the News-Press is to be congratulated not only for their series, but for the kind of long-standing commitment to unearthing troubling realities, so much a part of the legacy of Robert Kennedy."

THE BUDGET SUMMIT AND THE NEED FOR LEADERSHIP

HON. AMO HOUGHTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 1990

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, when the President and leaders of Congress announced that they would convene a budget summit, I breathed a sigh of relief—everyone who has touched the budget process knows it is time the key players huddled. Now, after listening to some of the more colorful rhetoric flying around the Hill, I am skeptical. Mr. Speaker, I am skeptical because I see the summit breaking apart before it has even been launched. I realize a certain amount of posturing is standard operating procedure, but the fact is that partisan advantage is a mirage with today's issues. Making sure the other guy gets blamed for whatever these negotiations produce is a form of brinkmanship of which I care not to be a part.

These negotiations are essential. They will form the basis of Federal action or inaction for the next 5 years. They must be about real, honest deficit reduction. To date, any budget proposal which has been dished up for us to analyze falls far short of the numbers required to meet the Gramm-Rudman targets—and remember, these targets were self-imposed. When one talks of developing national policy, much is made of the importance of the legacy we are to leave to our children and grandchildren. Our own parents and grandparents made tough choices. They just did. And they built an economy strong enough to withstand the heavy borrowing necessary to finance our deficit spending. But even our economy can stand this for only so long.

Making tough choices means asking every person in the U.S.A. to share in the cost. The costs vary but they impact every citizen. Take the issue of Social Security as an example.

Last month I sent a letter to nearly 7,000 senior citizens in my district asking whether they would be willing to accept the consequences of the belt-tightening that might result from a plan with the elements such as those put forward by Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI. Over 2,000 people responded. More than 50 percent said they would be willing to make sacrifices if they thought everyone else would be hit equally. Here are three of the responses we got:

As a senior citizen, I dislike touching the Social Security system as it is the livelihood of many elderly people. With food prices on the increase, we all have to eat. This is no longer a free country—taxes are hurting us no end—but do what you have to do.

In 1942 I went away for four years to make this a better world for my family. I did not ask for money because I was displaced. Now again for my new family I am asked to give up a little to help them have a better life. Once again I say yes.

I'm a 71-year-old retired teacher with an annual income of $11,407. I don't mind holding the line as long as everyone else does.

I don't know where we go from here, or what others have heard from back home, but from my standpoint, Mr. Speaker, it is the spirit shown in these letters that we must focus on as we move into the budget process. These are tough times. They require tough choices. I think the American people are willing to make them, but they have to have leadership. That is what we must supply.

Here's a copy of the letter I sent:

DEAR FRIEND: We've been in touch over the past several years about issues affecting seniors and the 34th District. As a senior citizen myself, I've also asked for your opinion on many occasions and appreciated your getting back to me.

What I'd like to do here is ask your opinion on a budget proposal made by Dan Rostenkowski. He is chairman of the committee which oversees tax issues, social security and medicare. Mr. Rostenkowski tries to take a different approach. He knows we are going nowhere on our present course. In brief, his proposal would raise the top income tax rate to 33 percent—this would increase the taxes of the people with annual incomes above $150,000 by an average of $13,000, boost gasoline, wine, beer and cigarette taxes, reduce the defense budget by $10 billion, and freeze all government spending for one year, including social security and other federal retirement pensions.

Now every citizen in this country owns a piece of the national budget. So I'm interested in how you feel about the Rostenkowski program, particularly the sensitive social security issue. "Stay away" say the signs here. As a matter of fact, several of my more politically astute colleagues have suggested that I not send this letter at all. Too dangerous. Yet, recently an official of the American Association of Retired Persons, Mr. John Rother, signalled that seniors recognize the need to do something about the deficit. He went on to say that "Our members are willing to make sacrifices as long as they are convinced that everyone else is making sacrifices on the same basis."

So here is where I need your thoughts. How do you feel about a Social Security cost-of-living adjustment freeze for one year (average of $23 a month), along with a freeze in all general spending—except the military? How do you feel about a cut of $10 billion in the military? How do you feel about a tax increase on gas, cigarettes, wine, beer—also an increased tax on average of $13,000 a year for those making high incomes—over $1,500 a year, if you were convinced that everyone else was also sacrificing and that the decision was going to "get fixed."

This is a tough issue, since I know the pressure is on all of us for increased school, county and local taxes, particularly with the state's financial condition. I guess you know that I want to bring this cancerous budget gap under control. It's killing us. But I also want to represent you and your sensitivities. There is nothing I want to do to undermine social security—nothing. However, the Rostenkowski proposal has come up—its author suggests an approach which, although not cast in cement, opens up a concept of sharing. I have not taken a position on any of these issues, but the subject is being debated, and I just thought that it was not something for any of us to debate down here without ckecking with those who will be most affected.

Sorry to bother you, but I need your help. I'll be sure to share your thoughts with Congressman Rostenkoswki.
